German Warning to Switzerland Turned Out to Be Boomerang

Rome.—A formula has been found to describe officially Germany's position with respect to Italy. As Italy and Germany are not at war the definition of enemy country cannot be applied to Germany, when Italy decided to seize German ships in Italian ports and prohibit the exportation of foodstuffs and other articles to Germany, besides resorting to other measures which practically amounted to hostile acts, a definition justifying such measures was indispensable. Accordingly Germany is now described as "the ally of a country at war with Italy," and this convenient description is invariably used in royal decrees sanctioning reprisals against Austrians, Turks and Bulgarians. "The ally of Italy's enemies" has spared no effort to create complications between Italy and her allies and her neighbors. The most recent attempt on Germany's part was aimed at creating complications between Italy and Switzerland. The Germans resorted to the tactics which were attempted without success in the case of Holland. Just as Germany confidently warned Holland that England intended to force the Scheldt and offered aid for the defence of Holland's neutrality and territorial integrity, Berlin has warned Switzerland that Italy is aiming at occupation of the Canton Ticino and offered to help her.

Germany pointed out to Switzerland that the Italians were erecting fortifications on the Swiss frontier which were obviously a menace to the Canton Ticino. Germany's warning caused a certain amount of "nervousness" in Switzerland. Possibly the Swiss Government demanded explanations from Italy, as inspired statements appeared in newspapers here to the effect that Italy's fortifications were solely a defensive precaution.

This attempt is merely the repetition or rather the sequel of the tactics followed by Germany nearly a year ago. When Italy declared war on Austria the report was spread that Germany was going to punish Italy by invading her across Switzerland. It was hoped that the Italians instead of assuming the offensive against Austria would concentrate troops along the Swiss frontier and hold large reserves to check German invasion through Switzerland. Moreover as Lombardy was threatened with invasion the inhabitants of this region were expected to be kept in a state of alarm.

Great Failure

Precautions were taken to check a possible German invasion across Switzerland and the frontiers were strongly guarded, but as time passed and the Germans did not arrive, such precautions gradually began to be considered useless and the reserves concentrated in Lombardy were sent elsewhere. Germany's menace, lost its value the more so as it failed to avert or slacken the Italian advance against Austria. Italy started work recently on fortifications along the Swiss frontier.

These fortifications existed since the outbreak of the war, and are merely being strengthened. There is every reason to believe that the covering troops held by Italy along the Swiss frontier can be considerably diminished when the work is concluded.

Germany expected Switzerland to be alarmed in order to have a chance of offering to help her. The advantage for Germany in case her offer to help Switzerland had been accepted would have been enormous. Military collaboration with Switzerland would mean simplifying the question of an invasion of Italy to such an extent as to render it an easy matter. The Swiss Government was not alarmed when warned about Italy's aggressive intentions against the Ticino, but merely solicited explanations in a friendly way from Italy and got them. As a result the Swiss troops concentrated along the German frontier have been reinforced while those guarding the southern frontier where the Italians are strengthening their fortifications have been diminished.

READS BY VOLCANO LIGHT
Can See Newspaper Print in Glow of Lava From Maunaloa

Honolulu.—Maunaloa, which was in eruption in May, has broken out again. A flood of lava which burst forth at an elevation of 7,000 feet is flowing down the mountain side, travelling southwest at the rate of about a mile an hour.

The flood of lava has divided, following two channels. The glow illuminates the entire landscape at night.

Newspapers can be read by its light many miles away. The course taken by the lava is that taken by the last previous eruption, about nine years ago. The sea is about fifty miles from the mountain in this direction, and there is little prospect of lava in between.
