

A Love Affair

"Yes," he said, with sad gravity "Arol."

"He's frightened," he said, gently. "He is not dead, but he is very ill."

"Arol? Oh, my lord!" was all she could say.

"Yes. He caught cold the day you left and rapidly grew worse. He has been, is still, very ill, and they are afraid."

"Oh, poor, poor child!" murmured Constance, brokenly, her tears falling fast as she forgot everything but the bright boy who had so readily learned to love her, and whose love she returned with all her tender heart.

"Oh, my lord, my lord!"

"I have just received a telegram," he went on. "They say that the fever is at its height, and that he is still unconscious. The day he was taken ill he began to fret for you. Your name will be on his lips continually, and ever since, in and out of delirium, he has called for you and begged you to come to him."

Constance could do nothing but cry silently.

"My mother is half distracted by anxiety," he said, and she begged me to try and find you and implore you to return, if you could possibly leave your sick relative. But I should have started in search of you even if she had not sent me. I got to London four nights ago, and have been looking for you ever since. I found out that you had come to Paddington, but lost all trace of you there, and to-night I was wondering what I should do next. Did you not see the advertisements in the papers?"

"No," said Constance, almost inaudibly.

"No, I need not have asked. You would have answered, would you not?"

"I would have come from the other end of the world to him, my lord."

"There is a train to-morrow morning, an early train, it leaves at 8 o'clock. Can you go by that?"

"Yes, oh, yes," she answered. The need for action had banished all her faintness and weakness.

"Very well. And now let me take you home."

She stopped short, her color coming and going. "Oh, let me go by that, please!"

"You will not let me come with you?"

"No, I would rather go alone," she said.

"You shall have your way. I will not worry you with one more question. I knew you would go to the poor child if you could."

"Oh, yes," she said. "Is there no earlier train I can go by, Lord Brakespore?"

"There is one at twelve to-night," he said.

"I will go by that, please," said Constance, firmly.

"No, you will be hurried, and you are not strong."

"I feel strong enough to walk all the way to him. Oh, let me go by that, please! Call a cab, my lord!"

He looked down at her earnestly, with a veiled, passionate tenderness in his eyes.

"Very well," he said, gently.

He beckoned a cab and put her in. The night had felt cold, and her hands, as he held it, grew cold. He took off his overcoat and wrapped it around her, paying no heed whatever to her remonstrances.

"Paddington at twelve. Keep the cab while you get ready. Now, your address?"

"She told him.

He went and spoke to the cabman, paid him, and took his number. Then he came back to her.

"Do not fret, he may be better; while there is life there is hope—good hope for a healthy child."

His hand held hers for a moment with a strong, encouraging pressure; then he released it, and signed to the cabman to drive on.

As the cab pulled up at the station, the marquis' tall figure came toward it, and he heard her say:

"There is plenty of time," he said. "You will not be more anxious than you can help."

Constance said nothing.

He had already taken the tickets, and he put her in a first-class carriage, on the seat of which were half a dozen magazines and a dainty basket of sandwiches and fruit. He spread a fur wrap over her knees.

"You are to sleep as much as you can," he said. "I am in the next compartment. If you should want me."

The guard whistled, and the marquis, having remained beside the door to the last moment, left her and jumped into his own carriage.

The train had got some distance on its way before Constance could realize that she was going back to Brakespore Castle, and in charge of the marquis. What would Lady Ruth say? But she put the question from her. What did it matter what anyone said under the circumstances? It was of Arol only she thought.

After a time she grew calmer, and took up one of the magazines. How careful the marquis had been of her! What consideration he had shown her! He had not insisted upon questioning her, had studied her feelings, her comfort, in every detail. Was it any wonder that her heart should feel full of gratitude to him?

Presently the pages of the magazine grew dim and blurred, and resting her head against the padded cushion, she fell asleep.

The train stopped at one of the large stations, and the marquis came to the carriage and entered it.

He stood for a moment looking down at her with an inexpressible tenderness that had something strangely sad and melancholy in it, and he took up the fur wrap, which had slipped to the floor, and softly wrapped it round her. Then, with a sigh, he looked down at her again, and left the carriage, seeing that the guard looked it after him.

Constance did not wake until the train steamed into Berrington. The marquis had telegraphed along the line to the station-master to procure a carriage from the castle, and it was waiting for them.

She had left it a few days ago under circumstances which Lady Ruth had tried to make ignominious; she returned to it escorted by its master. But this view of the situation was lost upon Constance, whose mind was fixed upon Arol.

The carriage rolled up the avenue, and the great door was opened. By the dim light burning in the hall, Constance saw

TIMES PATTERNS.

No. 864.—The model given here is one of the fashionable styles of the season. There are two seams in front and back running to the shoulder. The coat is fashioned in the straight hipless effects, and fastens across the chest in double-breasted style, with three buttons, the lower parts of the fronts being in cutaway style. The close-fitting sleeve is finished with an upturned cuff. This coat is desirable for a separate wrap or may form part of a suit. It is suitable for broadcloth in any of the popular shades of this season. The pattern is cut in 6 sizes, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust measure.

A pattern of this illustration will be mailed to any address upon receipt of 10 cents in stamps or silver.

Address, "Pattern Department," Times Office, Hamilton.

It will take several days before you can get pattern.

Even Her Blood Turned to Water.

When Dying of Pernicious Anæmia Her Life Was Saved by FERROZONE.

Probably very few cases are on record in which an absolute cure has been made of pernicious anæmia. But Ferrozone did cure Miss Elaine Stanhope—cured her absolutely, and her mother Mrs. G. Stanhope, of Rothsay, Ont., says the following:

"My daughter complained of feeling tired. She was very pale and listless, and kept losing strength till too weak to attend school. The doctors prescribed different bottles of medicine but Elaine kept getting worse instead of better. She had Anæmia and we were afraid for a while that she might never rally. We read of a similar case, that of Miss Davenport, of Stirling, Ont., being cured by Ferrozone, and this induced us to get it for Elaine. It took three boxes of Ferrozone to make any decided improvement, but when six boxes were used her daughter was beginning to be her old self again. It didn't take much longer to make a complete cure, and I am convinced that there is no better bloodmaker than Ferrozone. It has made a new girl of Elaine. She has gained ten pounds in weight and looks the picture of perfect health. She is stronger and enjoys the best of spirits. The credit of her recovery is entirely due to Ferrozone."

Every grown girl and young woman can make herself strong and healthy with Ferrozone. It makes blood, nerve and tissue,—makes it fast—makes it stay. Complexion soon becomes perfect, nerves get new strength, tiredness vanishes—perfect health is the reward for using Ferrozone, which is sold by all druggists—price 50c per box; don't fail to try it.

STATE TAXATION.

Report Which Shows Much Diversity in Some Matters.

Washington, May 17.—An antique and interesting report dealing with State taxation of manufacturing, mercantile, transportation and transmission corporations was made public to-day by Herbert Knox Smith, commissioner of corporations. The part of the report transmitted to President Taft concerns particularly the six New England States. It is expected that additional parts dealing with other groups of States will be published later.

Commissioner Smith points out that while the taxation of individuals throughout New England is on substantially the same basis, there is a wide diversity among the several States in both the theory and practice of the taxation of corporations. He noted as particularly interesting the Massachusetts plan of taxation of "corporate excess" on the market value of stock—less property otherwise taxed.

It is pointed out, too, that Massachusetts alone succeeds appreciably in efforts to tax specially the manufacturing and mercantile corporations.

The railroads, too, are the largest taxpayers. Public service corporations are most often brought under new systems of taxation.

CANAL OPEN.

Port Dalhousie, Ont., May 17.—The Welland Canal was opened up again for traffic at seven o'clock this morning. The City of Montreal was the first boat to lock up, with a large fleet following. There was also a number of down boats coming through. The steamer Gargantua is still here in a very bad condition.

DRINKING MORE.

Toronto, Ont., May 17.—"I think the reduction of license is causing an epidemic of drinking," observed Magistrate Denison this morning in the Police Court. The drunks were numerous and comprised the bulk of the cases on the docket.

Bulk tea may leave the dealer a large profit, but "Salada" Tea (packed in sealed lead packets) leaves a lasting and favorable impression upon the palate of all giving it a trial. Hence its enormous sale.

R. MCKAY & CO.

The noble-minded dedicate themselves to the promotion of the happiness of others—even those who injure them. True happiness consists in making others happy.

—Kirtarjanviva of Bharavi.

Cincinnati, May 17.—Dr. John Uri Lloyd, a great student of the Hindu philosophers, has adopted Bharavi's motto as his own.

Dr. Lloyd is an author, whose "Stringtown on the Pike" was one of the most charming of the six best-sellers of half a dozen years ago. He is also a chemist of high rank. Thirdly he is a manufacturer.

It's easy to carry this idea—giving happiness to others—into literature. It isn't impossible to carry it into a chemical laboratory.

The difference in Dr. Lloyd's case is that he has posted it over his desk in his factory—that he runs his factory by it.

There's a business man in New York State who talks and writes much about the brotherhood of man, and the beauty of co-operation, and the happiness which work brings to all. But he has a time clock in his plant, holds wages at the lowest point the trade will allow and "docks" his fellow workers for being late.

But Dr. Lloyd doesn't do these things.

His employees—he calls them assistants—sing as they work. They get their own meals at noon, and the boss eats with them, and talks with them.

Time clock—no. If a girl is late at the Lloyd chemical works—well, there must have been some good reason. No one asks why.

On his sixtieth birthday, recently, John Uri Lloyd ordered a great cart of roses, enough for every worker in his plant. His employees come to him with their troubles. When a girl gets married, they have a banquet for her and presents and flowers. She names her own successor.

"We're just like a big family," said Lloyd as he looked over his plant, which employs close to 100 people, mostly girls.

The Lloyd plant is a prosperous one, and well known among scientific men clear around the world. Its head is called a good business man. But other factory owners would throw up their hands in horror if they took a walk through the Lloyd plant.

"I figured this way," said Dr. Lloyd. "Happiness is the thing we want. Money brings happiness occasionally—often not. I can make a lot of other people happy by running my factory as I do. I've got enough money to be comfortable. I want to spend it myself, not leave it for executors to fight over. Long ago I came to the decision that Bharavi's theory was right. After trying it, I am still convinced."
