The exeited Orangemen now assembled in a riotous way in front ol. Capt. Gaskin's house, and demanded that the flags be hauled down, and they be allowed to proceed, as they would not walk under the flags. Some of the more ignorant members mistook the large rose for the shamrock, and no argument could induce them to alter their opinion of the design. Brother Phillips and Assistant Marshal Livingston used every exertion to quiet the Brethren, but their efforts were found to the useless, the great cry being "down with the flags." Capt. Gaskin, who is a consistent Protestant, was present, but very properly refused to lower the flags, which were not in any way objectionable, and had every right to fly. The scene soon became one of danger. Stones were hurled at Capt. Gaskin's house, and two large missles crashed through his windows, nearly striking his neice, who was standing in one of them. Stones were also fired at the flags, and persons in the crowd had narrow escapes from being struck. One man received a cut in the head with one of the missles, and Capt. Gaskin was struck a heavy blow on the knee.
