According to that the Stav was the natural senemy of the Teuton, and that the future would witness a terrible life and death struggle between the two races. He considered that a Slav inunflation of Western Europe was the continent's greatest danger; and in his minds eye he pictured the catastrophe of western sivilization drowned out by an overflow of memi-barbarons Tartar hordes. If this truly asts forth the late Emperor's views, it supplies a sufficient reason enough for his desire, ex-pressed in the letter before referred to, to see the Alisace Lorraine sore healed, and Gaul and Teuton made friends together, so that they might act as one to avert a common danger— the subjugation of all Europe by the service
