For 'Richer, For Poorer'

It was sweeping day and Mrs. Bernard, warm, tired and discouraged, sank down on the top step of the stairway to rest a moment before attacking the upper rooms. The view of the lower rooms, even from this lofty point of view was discouraging. With the rage up and the pieces of furniture pulled away from their accustomed places, the pitiless sunshine showed clearly every break in the carpet and every soiled spot upon the wallpaper.

"What's the use of trying to clean up, cover up and pretend any longer?" Mrs. Bernard said bitterly.

"I believe that good things, when they do begin to show the effects of long and rough usage, look worse than cheaper ones, but if they hadn't been good I don't know what they would have done, for we've never been able to replace anything," and she sighed as she looked at the expensive furniture, now marred and scratched, and at the carpets bravely holding to rich coloring, although worn almost through bare.

Her gaze could not reach the dining-room, but she knew that the beautiful but fragile glass and china with which she had so proudly started house-keeping had dwindled sadly, and the costly linen was patched and darned in many places. The bedrooms, still awaiting the attack of her broom were all needing supplies.

"It's the old story of flying before we learned to walk. Here we are, careworn and old before our time, and in such straits that we hardly know which way to turn, and think of the start we had. Our little fortune was a curse instead of a blessing, for it gave us a taste of a life of ease, then left us to be common drudges. If John had had only known how to manage, or if he could only learn to manage like other men, we might get even with the world—once more, but I don't see much hope. If I had a daughter I'd educate her so that she might be able to support herself and teach her to let married life alone. What right has any man to persuade a happy, care-free girl into making her happiness into his hands?"

The towns clock struck ten and Mrs. Bernard rose wearily, picked up her broom and adjusted the towel that was wrapped about her head. The rooms must be put in order before the noonday. She had a long way to go, and yet to go in the lower part of the house. The postman's whistle sounded at the front door and she went down to receive from him two envelopes, one addressed in the same handwriting. One was a wedding invitation and the other a letter.

"Why, it's from Una, my little Una!" exclaimed Mrs. Bernard as she read: "Dear Aunt Una—I am not writing letters to send with all my invitations, but I want you to be sure you are all you that you must come to my wedding. It would not be complete without you. You know my first experience in church weddings was when I was a young girl at your wedding and I have never attended one since that was half so pretty, nor have I ever been so impressed by any other ceremony as I was by that, young as I was. I want my wedding to be just as nearly like yours as it can be, and Oh, Aunt Una, the strangest part of it is, I am to marry a John, too. You will remember John Nelson. He was such a dear gawky boy, and I never dreamed that I would marry anyone I could always know, but when you see him you'll say he's a perfect dear. Of course you will not think him half as handsome as your John, and I know I shall be half so lovely a bride as you were, but we're very much in love and so happy! It will spoil all my pleasure, though, if you fail to come. I want you so much."

YOUR LITTLE UNA.

"Why, she's only a child!" Mrs. Bernard said, as she folded the letter. Then as she thought of the fifteen years that had flown since her namesake had been a flower girl at her wedding, she realized that the second Una would be an oldie bride than she had been.

The letters had miscarried and had been on the road for some days. The wedding was to take place on Wednesday evening of the next week, and this was Friday. How she would have to hurry to get ready for it! She must begin hurrying right away and she went tripping up the stairway like a girl.

She saved the letter and the invitation for a little surprise at the table, and was so eager to read them aloud to her husband that she did not wait to eat, but when she paused at the close of the reading, her husband only

BAT ORANGES
IF YOU WANT TO KEEP WELL

Careful tests have proved beyond question that orange juice has clearly defined medicinal virtues. Those who suffer with indigestion—are compelled to "diet"—find that after eating oranges regularly for breakfast there is no distress, no palpitation.

Where there was a tendency towards constipation, the eating of oranges regulated the bowels.

In skilful trouble, those who began the morning meal with an orange were noticeably improved.

There is, however, a quicker way to get better results. This is to take one or two "Fruit-atives" tablets at bedtime in addition to the juice of an orange before breakfast the next morning. "Fruit-atives" are the juices of oranges, apples, figs and prunes, in which the medicinal action of the fruit is concentrated.

"Fruit-atives" are sold by all dealers at 50¢ a box of 12. Send no receipt for a box before breakfast the next morning. "Fruit-atives" are the medicinal action of the fruit is concentrated. The medicinal action of the fruit is concentrated. The medicinal action of the fruit is concentrated.

FATAL COASTING ACCIDENT.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Feb. 11.—Twenty-seven persons were injured, two probably fatally, in coasting accidents in Greater Pittsburg during the past twenty-four hours. Twenty-one of them were in one accident on the north side and five in another accident in the same direction. Twenty-five boys and several girls started for Brighton Road down the Marshall Avenue on a four-board sled about fifteen feet long last night. The weight of the sled and the grade of the hill carried the sled at an uncontrollable speed. For over three hundred feet it dashed, and when George Becker, the guide, tried to stop his chain it refused to work. There is a curve at the foot of the hill. Here the sled took a sudden turn crashing into a telegraph pole.

Ten of those who occupied the front part of the sled were hurled clear to the car tracks, fifty feet away. Two were injured so seriously that they may die. Others sustained broken limbs, cuts, and other minor hurts.

MAY SLEEPLESS NIGHTS, DUE TO PERISTENT COUGH, RELIEF FOUND AT LAST.

"For several winters past my wife has been troubled with a most persistent and disagreeable cough, which invariably extended over a period of several weeks and caused her many sleepless nights," writes Will J. Hayner, editor of the Burley, Colo., Bulletin. "Various remedies were tried each year, with no beneficial results. In November last the cough again put in an appearance and my wife, acting on the suggestion of a friend, purchased a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The result was indeed marvellous. After three doses the cough entirely disappeared, and has not manifested itself since." This remedy is for sale by W. W. WARREN, BRIDGETOWN, N. S. W. W. WARREN, BRIDGETOWN, N. S. W. W. REPORTED DROWNED.

LUNenburg, N. S., Feb. 7.—The happiest people in Lunenburg today are George Blair and family. A letter received at noon by Mrs. Blair, dated Feb. 1, reads thus:

"Dear Mother—No doubt you have heard of my being drowned. Don't be lousy. I am very much alive. I shipped with others to go to Mexico, but didn't go. She hasn't been heard from. Will write you later.

Yours, "BERT."

On Tuesday a Key West despatch to Gloucester parties reported that five Nova Scotians were drowned off that coast, among them being the young man above named. The despatch was published and commented on in an obituary notice.

Boy King of Portugal Afraid of Assassination

With the church bells tolling continually, the bodies of the murdered king and crown prince, in two golden chariots, shrouded in black velvet and drawn by eight hooded horses, were escorted by a glittering funeral pageant across Lisbon to the Portuguese cemetery and laid to rest beside their ancestors of the Braganza dynasty. Seven hours elapsed from the time the funeral procession and the special ambassadors of all the powers gathered at the palace for the ceremony there, until three salutes of twenty-one guns and three volleys of musketry, reverberating over the terraced and sun-bathed hills, and answered by the British warships in the harbour, announced that the last rites were over.

Not a single untoward incident marred the last act of Portugal's tragedy. The vague forebodings proved baseless and there is a general feeling of relief tonight that all passed well. In view of the political turmoil. The great outpouring of people along the line of procession was noteworthy. They packed the pavements, crowded the sidewalks, and shaded the streets. While evidence of deep and popular sorrow seemed to be absent, many stood with uncovered heads as the funeral cortege passed, and nowhere was actual disrespect witnessed.

Troops guarded the streets and were massed in numerous parks and plazas along the route; all shops and cafes were closed and shutters covered the windows of the ministerial buildings in the Praca do Commercio where the king and prince were assassinated a week ago.

It was a grief-stricken palace, and strong men were shaken at the scene in the private apartments where the royal couple were received for the Queen Maria Pia, were to be seen, but King Manuel carried himself bravely as he mingled, though heavily pale, and on the verge of a break down, when the ordeal was finished. The Duke of Coimbra, Prince Eitel Frederick, and Infante Fernando, in addition to verbal condolences, presented personal letters from their sovereigns to the king, who was greatly touched at these messages. Tears that were almost constant in his eyes several times overflowed.

When the members of the court and the special representatives of foreign countries, entered and the funeral, the last rite of service, the king remained behind. Neither he nor the two queens followed the cortege to the cathedral. The widow, she, at his father, it is explained, absolved King Manuel from conforming to the tradition of walking behind the dead to the grave. Nevertheless, his absence and the absence of Queen Amalie and the Dowager Queen has caused unusual comment, being generally attributed to other reasons.
