

Some Other Day.

There are wonderful things we are going to do
 Some other day ;
 And harbors we hope to drift into
 Some other day ;
 With folded hands, the oars that trail,
 We watch and wait for the favoring gale
 To fill the folds of an idle sail,
 Some other day ;

We know we must toil if ever we win,
 Some other day ;
 But we say to ourselves, there's time to begin
 Some other day ;
 And so, deferring, we loiter on,
 Until at last we find withdrawn
 The strength of the hope we leanced upon,
 Some other day ;

And when we are old, and our race is run ;
 Some other day ;
 We fret for the things that might have been done
 Some other day ;
 We trace the path that leads us where
 The beckoning hand of grim despair
 Leads us yonder out of the here,
 Some other day.

The Life Assurance Story.

The whole story in regard to life assurance is a short one, and soon told. It is an old one, and ought to be familiar to every one, but it is not, says The Underwriter. To many it is strange, because for many reasons men are unwilling to learn that which is for their own good.

Because of this perverseness the story must be continually retold ; must be presented in multifold forms, presented in every light and shape and variety of places, so as to catch the attention which is always aroused. Nevertheless, it is the same old story ; and plainly told, and stripped of all embellishments, it is simply this :

Death is ever present, and no man living is sure of a single hour. On the other hand, many drop in the pathway of life, leaving ever behind them grief, oftentimes want and discomfort. No human forethought can guard against the first, (and it is well it cannot). But the other can be forestalled, and to do so by means of life assurance is right and legitimate. To attempt to do so in any other way, in the majority of instances, is unwise, and the result failure.
