by means of the perseverance and power enable people who are charged with the of that compact body directed by Mr. Parnell. It is not correct to compare the situation of the people in this country before responsible government was granted to us, with that of the Irish people to-day. The hon, member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) told us this afternoon that since we had been granted responsible government sullenness had disappeared from our midst and peace, happiness and loyalty to the crown prevailed throughout the land; but does not the hon. member forget that the bill which gave him that right was forced upon the people of Lower Canada against their wishes?

MR. LAURIER. It was the act of union they opposed.

Mr. McCarthy. Yes, and it is by the Act of Union that the hon, member got responsible government and the liberty to govern himself of which he has boasted, and which he says has enabled his people to live happily and prosperously under the British flag. That Act was passed in the British Parliament, against the will of the people of Lower Canada, and yet that union with the people of Upper Canada which lasted until the time of Confederation, was found, as my hon, friend has had to admit, to confer happiness and peace and prosperity upon us all. Now, the first thing I find in this Act is what, perhaps, may appear to be a terrible wrong, and that is the right to make preliminary investigation — the right, although no particular man may be charged with crime, to hold, as it were, an inquisition for the purpose of discovering who the criminal may be when a crime is committed. We have for some time past adopted that principle with much effect. If a fire takes place we have the right to hold an inquiry and take evidence for the purpose of discovering who it was that committed the arson. Does any hon, member say that, so far as that is concerned, there is anything so far astray or wrong? We will pass to the next provision of the Bill, the one concerning part of Ireland to the other—that that summary jurisdiction. It does, as has is a power to be found on our criminal been correctly stated, in certain mis- law. I do not know when it was passed, demeanors, not in matters of felony, but but it has been there certainly ever since in the minor descriptions of crime, I have been practising law. And it is offences to be tried before two magistrates, who may commit to gaol for a period not exceeding six months. We are a down-trodden race, for have we not been living under the Canada Temperance Act for some years, and that is the power we find within the four corners of that Act. There are many offences which can be tried under our criminal law before magistrates, most of them, I admit, by the consent of the accused; and if our hon. friends will look at our criminal statistics, they will find that, in the greater number of cases, that tribunal is chosen in preference to going before a jury; but in some cases, not all, the accused are compelled to be tried before a stipendiary magistrate, or a police magistrate, whether they will or not. What is to be done, will hon. members say? If juries will not convict, if out of a thousand crimes the convictions are only sixty-two, if judges in assize town after assize town have to adjourn the courts, or to adjourn the trials of the criminal cases, because in the face of the plainest evidence, juries will not convict, I ask hon, gentlemen, who say that this measure should not have been passed, to tell us what should be done. I point to the Act of 1877, to show what we would have done under similar circumstances. I point to the range of our criminal laws to show what we have done from time to time, and I think it hardly lies with the representatives of the people of Canada in this Chamber. which enacts the criminal law, to find fault with the Government of Great Britain and Ireland who have thought proper under these circumstances to ask for these powers. Then there is the power to move for a change of venue, but any hon. member at all familiar with our criminal law knows that that power-I am not now speaking of the trial in England; I will come to that later; I am speaking of the other power to move for a change of venue from one

Ca it ati er de th

> Ir m

th

it th is rig Ei re in la 88

he

be be E

80 to fr

wo A oc A re the pitt co D the hin his con T