

the concurrence and approbation of the people, and if its end is that, for which all government ought to be instituted, the happiness of the governed; then will this bill which your Lordship thought atrocious, shallow, and inept, appear consonant to justice, wisdom, benevolence, and policy; and the legislature of this country will have followed an illustrious example of antiquity, in making such regulations for the Canadians, "ut in sua tripa legibusque suis, mente animoque nobiscum agant." Quod non poterit dicendum est quod haec sententia admodum omnia in se continet.

F I N I S

Si illud actionem adiudicaverit certa sit certa illa ratio etiam si haec sententia non debimur dicere.