

that Manner, in those Stations. They knew, that the Success of the War (which began to appear early, by the Disunion of Prussia, and Saxony from France, by the Conquest of Bavaria, and the Expulsion of the French Armies out of Germany) in Despite of popular Impatience, or royal Prejudice, would, in Time, give Credit to the new Minister and his Measures, both with the People and the King; — and that, whenever that Credit was established, it would be more natural, that the Revolters from his Connection should reunite with him, than that they should be continued in the Posts they held; And that, as the Difference had been occasioned only from the Want of those Employments, which at first the new Minister had not Power to give, it might be easily made up by the Disposal of those Employments, whenever that Minister should obtain the Power of taking them away.

It was necessary for the B——rs, by early Precautions, to prevent the Possibility of this Union: In Order to which End, they cultivated the Acquaintance they had lately made, and at length entered into actual Engagements with the new Leaders of the Opposition; expressly stipulating in a proper Time to declare for them; binding themselves, in the strongest Manner, and in all Events, either by Management, or Distress, to prevail upon, or to compel his ***** to make room for them, by the Removal of the Earl of G——lle (then Lord C——t) and his Friends.

To prepare the Way for the more plausible and effectual Execution of this Plan, the new Opposition were instructed, what Part to take, and advised to declare openly (in Dependence upon the passionate Temper, and perverted Opinion of the Times) for those peaceful Principles, which, till that very Moment, they had condemned themselves; and
