Lightning's Work.

Among the more conspicuous structures damaged was the Island lighthouse. The lightning knocked off the weather vane and running down the shaft, splintered the door. The light was fixed in time for use when darkness made it necessary.

The flagpole on Upper Canada College, situated on so commanding an eminence, was an easy mark. Splinters and a stump show that it existed.

It is now quite unanimously conceded among the sterling bankers that the United States will import from Europe, during the coming scanson, very large amounts of gold—probably not less than $60,000,000 or $70,000,000. Some bankers would defer the beginning of this movement until next month, and the London market is laboring to that end. But recent indications in the home and foreign markets for international exchange hardly favor such postponement, and it is not improbable engagements will be made within 10 days.

Fowler was switching cars near the foot of Hamburg-street this morning. His duties were finished at 1 o'clock and he started for home. A freight train came along, and Fowler ran for the caboose, it being his intention to catch on and ride part way home. He had caught the step and was just about to throw himself on to the platforn, when he lost his hold, and just as the train reached the foot of the street, he fell and plunsed head foremost through the crust of the slag. Below the crust the fiery mass was still seething.

Another switchman, who happened to be passing by, heard the scream of the ERRORS OF YOUNG & OLD pital, and the altibulated the scene.
