SOME REFLECTIONS

London and North Oxford have brought on a joint verdict in favor of the coercion of the Northwest and it is useless to minimize the significance of the vote. Their decision is before all things the Laurier government's warrant for proceeding with the autonomy bill. It is a temporary set back to the cause of provincial rights and an endorsement of the clerical influence which inspired the attack on national schools.

With the will of the people as emphatically expressed in London and North Oxford it is idle to take issue. The electors of those constituencies presumably acted in accordance with public policy as they conceived it. Neither explanations nor apologies will affect the force of the outstanding fact that Ontario is not at the present moment stand with the magnitude of the crime that is being committed in the name of tolerance.

On this point there is room for a good deal of theorizing. Ontario at heart is sound and if the issue could have been presented in its full meaning the results might have been less disappointing to the friends of provincial rights. One of the great difficulties encountered was the apparent indifference of the Northwest. Providence does not help those who do not help themselves and the West, whatever its real feelings may have been, did not give outward demonstration of resentment over the attack on its educational freedom.

The West, it must be admitted, was not even credited with the resentment which it did feel. The Globe and the West as humbly submitted to federal tyranny. The West could have destroyed the value of these misrepresentations had it chosen to baffle itself. The fact that it remained comparatively silent made it hard for the East to fight its battles and the West must understand that primarily it has itself to blame for Ontario's failure to rescue it from the jaws of sectarian aggression.

Another cause of defeat was the disposition of some of the enemies of coercion to handle the question with kid gloves. They tried to create an issue by rattling the constitutional dry bones, and their failure to call a spade a spade did a good deal toward creating in the public mind the feeling that it was a battle of abstractions.

While the result of the by-elections is severely disappointing to the friends of a free West, it gives the government grounds for grounds for rejoicing. Ordinarily Hon. Chas. Hymen, returning for endorsement as a minister of the crown, would have carried London or 1500 or 2000 majority and North Oxford has yielded the Liberal candidate only one fourth of the normal Liberal majority. By-elections in Canada are notoriously favorable to governments and when Mr. Hymen reflects on the selfish aspects which he was able to make to London, his ministerial prestige, his campaign fund and the selfishness of public opinion which habitually follows a general election he can not glory in his majority of 350 votes.

In North Oxford is undoubtedly true that the Liberal candidate, Hon. James Sutherland, had the personal strength of the late Hon. James Sutherland. He could not under any circumstances have hoped to equal the vote of his predecessor and a majority of 300 is not to be explained by the superior popularity of Hon. James Sutherland. Many to be explained by the country's misfortune that there were not more of them. Ontario can be a tremendous power for good if she will but cast away her party traditions and party prejudices and judge parties, not by what they were, but by what they are.

In neither London nor North Oxford was there that weakening of party ties, which a great issue should effect. This on the final analysis is one of the chief causes for regret. The cause of educational freedom for the West is not lost it is merely checked. Sooner or later the West will find the restriction irksome and when that day comes the West will assert its educational independence without Ontario's aid.

OTTAWA NEEDS A NEW HOTEL

An enterprising railway company has made known its purpose of building a million dollar hotel in the City of Ottawa and The Journal attacks the proposition as if someone was bringing a plague into the city. The Journal says that a number of people of Ottawa have their money invested in the existing hotels, and that these hotels have fairly met the demand put upon them. Further The Journal suggests that the hotel business in Ottawa pays only during sessions of parliament and that the light business carried on between sessions makes the enterprise precarious.

It is doubtful if very many people of Ottawa will sympathize with these appeals on behalf of the hotels of the capital, and certainly they will not be shared by outsiders who know what hotel life in Ottawa really means. The great drawback to the City of Ottawa today is its lack of a really first-class hotel. At present the accommodation is deficient both in quantity and quality. It is not adapted even to the profitable seasonal business and it has become a problem for members of parliament and others whose business calls them to Ottawa for several months in the year to work out the problem of existence while they are the enforced guests of the capital.

Ottawa is fortunate in the enjoyment of the benefits which it derives from being the national capital and should at least display enterprise enough to accommodate the people whose only desire is to spend money for the comfort of first class hotel life. The Ottawa Journal should welcome the introduction of the capital which will take the form of an hotel that will be keeping with the dignity and the requirements of the city. An hotel such as is contemplated by the Grand Trunk Railway will create its own trade, and the existing hotels, if they are enterprising and alert, will do better or at least as well as they are doing now. All events neither the City of Ottawa nor outsiders who are compelled to become guests at Ottawa owe any consideration to the hotels which have served them during the past few years.

MUSIC'S PERILOUS CHARM.
A decision in the recorder's court in Montreal reveals the fact that dealers are not allowed to have music in their stores except with the special permission of the mayor. A local storekeeper employed music charms to attract trade and the device seems to have done more than its duty. It not only filled the store, but it blocked the payment in front of the store, and the climax came when the offending merchant was hauled before Recorder Weir and fined $5 and costs or a month in jail.

The grounds upon which the fine was imposed do not seem to be either sound or reasonable. Music as employed by the dealer in question was a form of advertising, a very poor one we admit, and in no way comparable with the columns of the journal, but it was a device to draw trade and it is difficult to understand why this particular method should have been penalized while other forms of advertising which produce the same results are allowed to go on. It would be just as reasonable to fine a merchant who dressed his window in such an attractive way as to command the attention of a crowd.

No one has yet suggested that the merchant who decorates his window is liable to fine for impementment, and the merchant who decorates his store with music is surely entitled to the same immunity. If anything is to be said against music as a device to attract customers it is not that it draws crowds and blocks the payment, but that it may exercise an unhealthy influence on some neurotic customers while making their purchases. Bands and orchestras have really no place where they are under modern conditions, where ninety per cent. of the shoppers are women. They have in fact no more place in the store than they have in a saloon. Music in a saloon is designed to create a reckless disregard for the value of money and music in a store is designed to create a reckless disregard for the value of time. It is not for amusement, it is for business. Montreal justice would be better employed in getting after the big stores that employ music to influence women's sense of the value of money before cutting losses on the petty storekeeper who uses music to attract customers to his shop.

A DANGEROUS INNOVATION.

There has been very little criticism of the increase of Ontario's salaries to $2500 per year, and the public will probably suspend judgment until it finds whether or not the increase will bring a better class of ability to the management of the city's affairs. On the surface there is not much to be said in favor of the increase. The board of control, which was previously representative in character, has been converted into a set of paid officials, and there is a measure introduced into the elective system of officials which is to be given a fair trial the city should at least be given a chance to select its officials in the open market.

At present a candidate for the board of control has to have a year's experience as an alderman. Now that the controllers are to receive $2500 per year there is no reason why this restriction should be continued. It would cause the city council to degenerate into a kind of preparatory school for gentlemen whose ambition is to qualify for a $2500 a year civic office. The result of such a system would be to largely rob the city council of its representative character and to discourage more than ever the tendency of the best men to become candidates for civic honors.

The placing of the members of the board of control on salaries which are supposed to require from them the devotion of their full time to the affairs of the city creates an altogether new condition of affairs in the civic administration. It is a step towards the elective system of officials, and it is dangerous in its tendency to encourage for municipal duty men who are striving for salaried positions rather than men who have wholesome ambition to serve the city's interests.

BELATED VIRTUE.

Yesterday at Kingston showed its first inclination to deal with the school clauses of the autonomy bill. Rev. R. G. MacBeth of Paris gave notice of a motion reaffirming the position unanimously taken in 1906, and declaring that "separate schools are inimical to the unity of the Canadian people, and by protesting against the establishment of separate schools in any part of our country unless they are imperatively demanded by the terms of the constitution, or by the legislative action of the people most directly concerned."

It is no doubt a coincidence that the general assembly gave its first hint of inclination to deal with the school day that the by-elections were being held in London and North Oxford. But what purpose was to be served
