As borne along with favouring gale,
And streamers waving bright,
How gaily sweeps the glancing sail
O'er yonder sea of light!
With painted sides the vessel glides
In seeming revelry,
And still we hear the sailor's cheer
Around the capstan tree,
Is sorrow there, where all is fair,
Where all is outward glee?
Go, fool, to yonder mariner
And he shail lesson thee.
Upon that deck walks tyrant sway,
Wild as his conquered wave,
And murmuring hate that must obey,—
The Captain and his slave!
And dark autilition's swell,
And some that part with bursting heart
From objects loved too well.
And many a grief with gazing fed
On yonder distant shore,
And many a tear in secret shed
For friends beheld no more;
Yet sails the ship with streamers drest
And shouts of seeming glee:
Oh, God! how loves the mortal breast
To hide its misery!

VARIETIES.

The late Mrs. SIDDONS gave frequent evidence, in conversation, of those deficiencies of education which the force of genius enabled her to surmount on the stage. Dining one day at the house of a nobleman distinguished by the literary character of its familiar circle, she was placed next the Baron Auguste de Stel, who thought to gratify the tragic muse by describing the enthusiasm of the Purisiane for the works of Shakspeare. After specifying some friend of his own who could repeat the tragedy of Hamlet, from beginning to end, Mrs. Siddons enquired in her usual rhythmical measure, "And lives that worthy man in this our clime?" The Baron replied that his friend was no more; that he died suddenly in a fit "dane som bureau," Unfortunately this familiarly associated word presented nothing to the mind of his gifted auditress, but the idea of a chest of drawers; and she immediately replied with great naivete,—"In his bureau?" The demeanour of Mrs. Siddons was rarely divested in private life of the solemning contracted during her histrionic functions. It is said that a Batk shopman was frightened into a fit, by the scrutinizing eye and sepulchral tone, with which, during the purchase of a piece of calico, she once inquired, "Did you say, Sir, this would wash?"—Cover Journal.

A DISTINCTION WITHOUT A DIFFERENCE,—The parsimonious habits of a late distinguished Admiral have irequently afforded subject for merriment affoot. Wherever he was employed as Port-Admiral, a perion of the flags-ship's crew was daily despatched with the dawn to milk the cows, "start the pigs," and stuff the turkeys. The bravest on board were converted into cowherds. I tome happened that an Irish waisier had been personally directed by the Admiral to enforce his commands, "that no person whatever should walk upon the grass, and that nothing but cows should be seen upon the lawn." A hady in full deather appreached the sentined on the sward—"Keep aff there,"cried Pat, "Keep aff." "Pray, Sir," exclaimed the mortified dame, "do you know who I am?" "Sarrah know," "Not the Admiral's wife, Sir?" "Not I—all I know is, you're not one of the Admiral's course." "Metropolitan.

Anti-Reform Feast.—On Saturday last, the Merchaut Tailors' Company gave a dinner to a knot of antis-reformers, among whom were the Duke of Wellington, Lord Eldon, Sir Charles Wetherell, and a score of the same school. The speeches were short, but pungent, and of course the Reform Bill was an object of vituperation.

"The Bills the vituperation.

"The Bills the windle Bills and Norming are the Royal Hotel, Chester, the other day, asked a vaiter if he was for reform, or not; to which the intelligent domestic replied, "To be sure, Sir. Mistress and all our servants, are 'for the bill, the whole bill, and nothing but the bill." After dinner the reverend gentleman called for his bill, and paid down the exact amount, and was leaving the coffect-room, when the waiter accosted him, begging not to be forgotten. "Forget yon, Sir," said the other, "are you not satisfied to have all you just told me you required—the bill, the whole bill, and nothing but the Bill " and then departed, saving his sixpence.

A lawyer, engaged in a cause before Judge Peters tormented a poor German so much with questions that the witness, an old man, declared that he was see shausted that he must have a drink of water her can be could say any thing more; upon this the Judg called out to the teasing lawyer, "I think, Sir, yo must have done with the witness now, for you hav pumped him dry."—New York Gozettz.

consists in the beauty of this minimal but gracifid appendage. The sultan of the Mahomedan empire is so great a being in his own estimation, that he does not condescend to address the representative of the king of England but through his minister; or to receive him before he has been fed and clothed, and rendered fit to appear in his presence. It is, indeed, curious tat the English, or any European nation, can reconcile themselves to such degrading indignities.—Aleock's Travels.
