As Hiram Sees It
"Well, sir," said Mr. Hiram Hornbeam to the Times reporter, "I had a shake hands yesterday with a lot of them nose-paper fellers from the Old Country an' Austray an' South Africa, and Lord knows where. Me an' Lord Burnham got quite chummy. He wanted to know about the Settlement, an' said he wished he had time to go out an' spend a day with me an' Hanner on the old place. He's a fine feller. I used to think them lords was kind of snazzy an' wouldn't talk to common folks any when they wanted to order 'em around—but if they're all like him an' the Dook of Devonshire I wouldn't mind havin' one for a neighbor 's'pose they can't help their titles—sort o' wished on 'em—aint they? I liked that labor feller, too. He made a real good speech out there to the Manor House. If they're all like him they aint too bad. He's got a hull lot o' hose-paper fellers close to an Englishman he aint half as bad as they make him in the funny papers. I had a real good time yesterday, an' I me an' Hanner ever takes that weddin' tower we been talkin' about fer forty years I guess we'll just feller the flag an' see some of them places where this crowd come from these days—yes, sir. Don't it beat all? If them Loyalists in the Old Bay'n' Ground could see what we seen yesterday they'd remember what the Good Book says: 'They rest for their labors and their works do follow them.' I aint sure that's just right, but Hanner—she'd know if she was here. Well, well, I must go home an' tell 'er all about it."
