ONY.

The Major, who has done great service for the defence, resumed his important deposition regarding artillery matter and the bringing out of points and phraseology in the bordereau, indicating that the writer could not be Dearfus.

disating that the writer could not be Disvfus. In response to questions from Maitre Labori, leading counsel for the defence, and M. Demange, of counsel for the defence, Major Hartmann said any officer attending the Chalone camp could have obtained sufficient information; to write notes on the covering of troops and Madagascar matters.

M. Labori then recalled Gen. Mercier's attack on Capt. Freystaetter on the latter's declaration that the secret dossier communicated to the court of 1894 containing a document concerning a shell, for which Gen. Mercier called the captain a liar. Major Hartmann affirmed that it was quite possible that particulars about a certain shell should have leaked out in 1894.

ANOTHER CONFRONTATION.

ANOTHER CONFRONTATION.

An interesting confrontation between Gen. Deloye and Major Hartmann followed, the General declaring he did not believe the Major was keeping strictly to the truth. Deloye then proceeded to point to what he said were insacuracies in Major Hartmann's testimony. He itsisted that Dreyfus, in the course of conversations with artiliery officers, could have secured information on the subjects mentioned in the bordereau, to which the Major retorted that if any artillery officers could have secured information on the subjects mentioned in the bordereau, to which the Major retorted that if any artillery officer had been questioned by Dreyfus he would already have come forward to say so, as a matter of strict duty. General Deloye, questioned by M. Laborr and M. Demange, said the inventor of the Robin shell told him Dreyfus never asked him for particulars about his shell, except on a minor point. The General added that he came as a technical witness to show Dreyfus could be guilty, adding that it was not his business to say whether he believed him innocent or guilty. He could only any that Dreyfus' contention that it was impossible for him to know certain matters referred to in the bordereau was untrue.

M. Labort asked Gen. Deloye if he tain matters referred to in the bordereau was untrue.

M. Labori asked Gen. Deloye if he knew whether the documents which could have been betrayed by the traitor, especially by the writer of the bordereau, were important, whereupon the general turned to counsel and excitedly cried, "Don't ask me! don't ask me!"

These exclamations created a sensation in court, which was doubled when Gen. Deloye added that there was sufficient in the bordereau to establish that the traitor knew the importance of the documents he was giving up.
The witness said:—"When I read the bordereau I was dismayed."

The letters exchanged between Col. Picquart and Gen. Gonse at the time the colonel wanted a thorough investigation into the case, were then read, and M. Labori pointed out to Gen. Gonse that these letters never alluded to the alleged confession of Dreyfus.

General Gonse replied that it was because he always advised Col. Picquart not to mix up the Esterhazy and Dreyfus cases. Dreyfus, he added, had been condemned, and his case could not be recopened, but they were bound to see if there was not another traitor. The general them made a binier complaint at the fact that his letters that been communicated to M. Scheurer-Kestmer, former Vge-President of the Sentet, who'r jublished them in the book entitled "Pontius Pister."

Replying to M. Labori, General Gonse insisted that Dreyfus, having local back to his case.

A scene between Gen. Gonse and Colonel Picquart followed. The latter of abominable intrigues, and when he received in Tunis a letter of threats from the laste Col. Henry, sent with the sasent of Generals Gonse and De Roisdeffre, Colonel Picquart added that he was not responsible for the subsequent publication of the letters. In reply, General Gonse and De Roisdeffre, Colonel Picquart added that he was not responsible for the subsequent publication of the letters. In reply, General Gonse and he had not given his consent to Henry's letter and shat Col. Picquart perceived machinistions against him everywhere. Picquart demand the showed him the secret dossier. Therefore he acquairted himself with the probability that Dreyfus was impocent.
