He told me himself he intended to make me love him, and he succeeded only too well. Morning, noon, and night he was after me, and I felt he was my whole existence. All this time I knew he was a married man. I have no doubt the verdict will be "Temporary insanity;" but I am quite sane, only unhappy, miserable, and broken-hearted. The coroner said that as the woman committed suicide in the letter, it was necessary to call him as a witness.

Frank Hudson, the man referred to in the letter, was then called, and said he was a bricklayer, and was thirty-four very sof age. He could only say LONDON, June 16—A tragedy of illicit love and ultimate despair was inquired into by the Wandsworth corner, when he held an inquest on Mrs. Emily Jane Cage, thirty-seven, a blind-maker's machinist, of Starthfield road, Earlsfield, who shot herself in a garden in Tranmere road, Earlsfield, on The widower, James Cage, of Pevensey road, Tooting, a labofer, said he had been separated from his wife for over a year Asked by the coroner if the separation was because of a man, the witness said he had seen her with a man. She had had a child before her marriage with witness of which the latter was not the father. That child was now twenty-one years of age. There were two children of the marriage with witness of which the latter was not the father. That child was now twenty-one years of age. There were two children of the marriage with witness of which the latter was not the father. That child was now twenty-one years of age. There were two children of the marriage, who supported themselves. He did not make his wife any monetary allowsnee.

William Wiltshire, of Tranmere road, Earlsfield, a printer, said he was going home along Tranmeter road about 2.30 a. m. on Tuesday. He heard a shot, and on investigation found the body of a woman lying is the front garden of a house with a revolver by her side. The coroner said a piece of paper was found in her chatelaine, on which was written, "Frank Hudson is the cause of all this, Please find two letters in my box at home explaining everything."

The coroner said he had read the two letters, and in the main their contents were of a scandadous nature. It would extend the series of the girl time and again, and when young Snodgrass, called "Classy" should and said to themselves, "Gee. Snodgrass copped that one, too. "We'll have good and said to themselves, "Gee. Snodgrass copped that one, too. "We'll have good and said to themselves, "Gee. Snodgrass copped that one, too. "Handsome" was troubled. In truth his conscience pricked him sorely. While he could use his "pony" with the pext fellow, to be helped out by an outsider, to be given the answer, direct, seemed to his peculiar code of ethics to be very wrong. And so, as an officer and a gentleman, he had decided to tell it all to the commandant. He met him on the parade ground and respectfully saluted.

"How now, Snodgrass?" asked the would stop and talk to her as she sometimes did, and tell her pretty

"HOW NOW, SNODGRASS?" ASKcommandant. And Snod told his his cause for worry. His superior heard him through with a peculiar twinkle in his eye, and when the story was finished he said facetiously enough for an old duck, "Go, marry the girl; but don't let it happen again."

At which they bith laughed long.

KATRINA'S NEW SHOES.

It was a beautiful sunshiny day, and all the birds were singing, they were so happy. But here by the road-side sat little Katrina crying and feeling very miserable because her papa would not let her have new wooden shoes and bright ribbons to wear to the would stop and talk to her as she sometimes did, and tell her pretty stories.

Just then the lady came. When she saw Katrina had been crying she got off her horse and sat down on the grass beside the little girl and told her about the fairles. When she asked Katrina why she had been crying, poor Katrina hung her head and told the lady it was because her papa would not buy her new shoes and she would have to stay at home from the fair.

The lady took her in the carriage to the fair, and when the people saw the lady with the little girl they cheered and bowed, and said among themselves. "See, our prince's rich American wife is not proud and ignorant: she is loved by that little girl and has been kind to her, so she must have a good, kind heart, and we will all love her."

Great was Katrina's surprise when she heard the lady was a real princess.
