London in Mid-Season—The Duchess of Wellington—Royal Hosts and Guests.

LONDON, May 4, 1874.
THE MID-SEASON.
We are now in the very height and perfection of the "London Season." The genial warmth of Spring has shed its grateful beam upon us earlier than usual, and we have had, for the past month, such weather as the loyal Briton is fain to call "Queen's weather." You cannot imagine a deeper, richer verdure than that with which the parks are just now clothed and sheltered; I have never seen anything to equal it anywhere else. The sun is just now perfectly dazzling, and usually muggy and smoke-ridden London; it reminds me now and then, of the blinding brightness of the American atmosphere in June. Everybody that is anybody is in town; for a month at least the queens of society, and Miss Flora McFlimney, who aspires to that royal rank, have been engaged in rattling about in their carriages, giving and going to routs, presiding with dignity at the dinners of their husbands, and sedulously attending the two opera-houses on alternate nights. Ladyship is, I think, in unusually good spirits this year; society is more lively than it has been for a long, long time; once more London has a certain air of smiling Majesty, and the palaces, instead of standing gloomily dark, are almost often, carrying joy to the tradesmen who see it from afar, and whose joy is commercial rather than social. Everything seems to have combined, this year, to make the season brilliant and gay. A Tory Ministry almost always brings with it a more brilliant festive and social sphere; and although there is no chance now of a change of government, as the Tories are so much in the ascendant, and the Duchess of Wellington as Mistress of the Robes, and the Duchess of Devonshire as Mistress of the Household, the nobility, indeed, upon her devoted ruler rather different, in maintaining the prestige of the great house of Wellesley. The Duke is one of the most popular and the most acceptable of the only resemblance to his illustrious father is the physical one of his big nose and small grey eyes. What a fall there was between the first Duke and the second, the hero of Waterloo and the carpet colonel of the Somersetshire Regiment, the line London society has long seen and despised. The Duchess, however, has in her time one of the beauties of Victoria's court; and there is a romance about her early life which has given her the latter the complexion rather of an ambitious and social than a sentimental debutante. The old Duke was very fond of his daughter-in-law, who returned his paternal affection with hearty good will; but for her husband she has had no very thrillingly romantic fondness. She is rather beyond middle age now, and is, as a rule, rather staid and demure, and she has taken up her abode at Windsor for the season, coming, however, often enough to Buckingham Palace, and holding "drawing-rooms" there at sufficiently frequent intervals. Her West End trade is a class of lively butler, and West End society on the one side, pretty much all the time, and on the other, the aristocracy of the country, who once more become the temple of hospitality which it was before Albert died; and nothing says those privileged persons who are invited thither to the breakfast parties and open-air concerts, the luncheons and dinner parties, can be more charmingly simple and cozy than that hospitality is. The royal children, which, in a family like Victoria's—she having nine children and twenty-four or twenty-five grandchildren—come round with tolerable frequency, are kept with lavish gaiety; and scarcely a day passes that the Queen does not act as hostess in her noble old Plantagenet castle. Her children and cousins, too, turn out on all to have a liberal social development of character; and each new royal establishment becomes the centre of social amenities. The Prince and Princess of Wales at Marlborough House and Sandringham, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh at Clarence House, the Prince and Princess Christian (Victoria) at Cumberland Lodge, the Prince and Princess Teck (Mary of Cambridge) at Kew, the Duke of Cambridge (a bachelor, at least in the sight of the law) in Park Lane, are this year performing that part of the royal duty which consists in sharpening the edge of social pleasure with an éclat which somewhat recalls the many court of the Elizabethan times. The Marquis and Marchioness of Lorne (Princess Louise, sculptress and poetess) have hitherto been noticeably retiring, appearing rather seldom in society and doing but little as host and hostess; they have lived a quiet life in the country, making occasional visits to their royal relatives and few aristocratic friends at Windsor, Sandringham and in the rural castles. But they have just taken up their sojourn for the season at the paternal town residence, at Argyll Lodge, at Campden Hill, the Duke and Duchess having gone to Inverary Castle, in the Highlands, to recruit the exhausted ducal health; and the rumor is that the Lodge will be the scene of much gaiety. The Princess Louise is the only one of the Queen's married children who has as yet been unobscured with children.

THE THEATRES, ETC.
I need not say that the theatres are reaping their share of the general gaiety and joyousness of the season. If neither Covent Garden nor Drury Lane has operated anything very novel in its dramatic repertoire, they have, at least, yielded some sensation in fresh stars, who have generally turned out quite acceptable to the patrons of the two houses. Meanwhile the diva Patti is the centre, as always, of a brilliant display of fresh repeated parts with all her talent and grace. At Drury Lane a native tenor, Mr. Brantman, has made an exceedingly good impression as Faust, with Miss Rosa as Margherita. Much disappointment is expressed at the absence of Nilsson, who was expected, as well as Lucca; but neither can be expected to appear. Miss Imogen O'Neill is one of the new prima donnas, and has made a successful debut, full of promise, of future popularity, in Verdi's "La Traviata." The exhibition of the Royal Academy is open with a brilliant display of fresh pictures, and is a favorite resort for the fashionable people on the morning ride in Boston Row and the 8 o'clock dinner. Soon the Epsom races will intervene to give a spice of sport to the city pleasures, and with Whitstable, the early summer carnival of the masses and the breathing space for the police, will come the season of the seaside and holiday making at the Crystal Palace and Hampton Court. As the time of year goes on, it is very gay as Paris, and the variety of its pastimes and amusements cannot certainly be excelled by any other part of the world.
