

ginning of a new year may not appear to parents to be a matter of much moment, and dilatory students are apt to plead this as an excuse for prolonging their vacation; but in fact such an absence is very prejudicial to the student's progress. Deprived of the preliminary instruction, always given upon the introduction of new studies, he is necessarily at a great disadvantage in competing with more punctual class-mates. Moreover, students desirous of beginning their classical course must enter within ten days after the opening of classes in September.

Disciplinary Regulations.

To insure the real progress of the students in their studies good order is indispensable, and hence exact observance of the College rules is enforced.

Students are everywhere and always under the supervision of Priests or Brothers. The senior and junior students have separate study-halls, play-grounds, etc.

The use of Tobacco is strictly forbidden.

Intoxicating liquors are absolutely prohibited, and their use or introduction into the College is a cause of expulsion.

No branch of study may be begun, or once begun may be discontinued, without the permission of the Prefect of Studies.

Compensation is required from students for any damage done by them to the furniture or other property of the College.

All mail-matter addressed to the students, or sent by them, is subject to the inspection of the President, or his delegate.

Students who have failed to give satisfaction in the class room, or who have been guilty of misconduct, must perform the tasks assigned them.

No book, periodical, or newspaper may be introduced into the College without having been previously examined and approved by the Prefect of Studies.

Unapproved books or periodicals found in the hands of a student are withheld from him until his departure from the College, or are destroyed at the discretion of the Prefect of Studies.
