

Provincial Elections
in Canada since War

In our own Dominion, there is not a single province which has not had a provincial election since the termination of the War, with the exception of the Provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, which had their elections in the months of June and July, respectively, of the year 1917.

Why, it may be asked, should the Government of Canada seek further to withhold from the people of this country as a whole a right conceded to them with good effect in every province of the Dominion, and a right which has been conceded by their governments to the peoples of every other portion of the self-governing parts of the British Empire, and by their governments to the peoples of the Allied and Associated Powers, of Oriental and South American and even of enemy countries?
