LARGER SCHOOL USES. Mr. Leake's Report to Mr. Harcourt Makes Open All the Time.

Mr. Albert H. Leake, Superintendent of Technical and Manual Training and Household Science, has reported to the Minister of Education the results of his observations made during his recent trip to inspect the schools of New York, Brooklyn, Jerschools of New York, Brooklyn, Jersey City, and Philadelphia.

After detailed references to the American system of education in the subjects of his department, Mr. Leake calls attention to the fact that the public schools serve the community less than one-fourth of the time, and only a small portion of the community at that. But they gould, he said, be utilized not only for the education of the children, but as well for the general education of the community, and at present he believes the public school falls far short of what it might do for the public welfare.

But what can be done for the education of a community more than is now done in the public schools, he asks? This, he continues, is a proper question, and the Speyers School (Pennsylvania), will undertake in part to answer it. This school proposes to place its entire plant at the disposal of the community after school hours afternoon and evening, and all day on Saturday, holidays, and during the regular vacations. The gymnasium and kindergarten rooms are so arranged as to be easily used for public lectures, social meetings and entertainments. Boys' meetings and entertainments. Boys' clubs, girls' clubs, and mothers' meetings will be encouraged. The gymnasium, baths and library, will be open to the public when not actually needed for the school. Classes will be formed to meet afternoons and evenings in sewing, cooking and housekeeping, in music, in free hand drawing and design, and in woodworking, and is other simple industrial arts. Regular night school classes will be formed if there is a demand for them. In short, the purpose is to serve the community in every possible way, and particularly to experiment in ways and means of bridging the gap between the close of the public school work and the time when young men and women settle down to permanent employsettle down to permanent employ-ment at eighteen or twenty years

Canada's Sinscurists.

Canada's Parliament always carries on its rolls a multitude of helpless ones, says The Toronto News.

The most that many of them ever do is to lend a hand, now and thea, when some trifling service of a clean and agreeable character, like packing and unpacking documents, is to be done in the office to which they are attached and where they spend ing and unpacking documents, is to be done in the office to which they are attached, and where they spend most of their time writing personal letters, telling stories or reading the newspapers, which are subscribed to by the Department. Of course, there are exceptions to this rule. There is one man in the Public Works Department who is a very respectable citizen, and who declines to make an attempt to kill time. At one period he was the most noted man in the Department. Although the evident intention of the patron who got him his job was to provide him with a sinecure he was as regualr as the clock in reporting for duty; and, to the astonishment of everyone concerned, when a big snowfall occurred and the drifts were piling up alongside the western block, he appeared at the door of his chief's office and demanded a shovel. It was in dead earnest, and resolved to earn his pay, and a few minutes later he was up to his knees in the heavy snow, cutting paths and cleaning gutters as if he had been born to the was every contained to the was up to his knees in the heavy snow, cutting paths and cleaning gutters as if he had been born to the wage-earner's estate, instead of coming from one of the best families in Western Ontario. in Western Ontario.

Story of the Late Justice Lount. The late Mr. Justice Lount was always fond of a joke, and his good humor was contagious. An anecdote about him is being re-told. In days gone by he was a young lawyer at Barrie, where also Mr. D'Arcy Boulton had a law office. Mr. Lount, in driving home one dârk night when the roads were blocked with snow, ran over a calf. The farmer demanded $10. Not having that amount in his pocket. Mr. Lount told the farmer his name was Boulton, of Barrie, and to call and see him. In due course the farmer called upon Mr. Boulton, then a candidate for Parliament, but he indignantly denied responsibility. The farmer then took legal advice from Mr. Lount in entire ignorance that humor was contagious. An anecdote farmer then took legal advice from Mr. Lount in entire ignorance that he was the real delinquent. Lount undertook to "see" Boulton, to whom he addressed the following weighty arguments: That no doubt the farmer was mistaken, but an election was coming on, etc. Mr. Boulton paid up, and at the next county Bar Mr. Lount told the whole story with great enjoyment. whole story with great enjoyment. Preserving Niagara Falls.

Preserving Niagara Falls.

The Americans, having gone to the limit in commercializing Niagara Falls by harnessing the power on their own side and decorating the banks with factories, are putting up a tremendous appeal for the preservation of the natural beauties of the great cataract, with a special protest against the commercializing of the Canadian side. It is too bad that the primeval beauty of the surrounding scenery cannot be preserved, but it looks very much as if the falls was too valuable commercially to be maintained as the greatest show on earth for tourists. An untouched gold mine would also be an interesting exhibit for curious visitors, but to allow it to remain untouched on that account would be an expensive way of gratifying curiosity.—Ottawa Citizen.

The Point of View.

A man's sensibilities get somewhat of a jolt when he sees a pretty bird eat a pretty butterfly. Sometimes one thinks it hard that the butterfly is not allowed to live its little life free from molestation. Sometimes one feels sorry that the bird should have so scant a breaklast.

REV. DR. RAINSFORD.

The Experiences of One of New York's Greatest Clerics When He Was a Curate in Terente, Ont.

It was a new experience for the Torontonian of a quarter century back to go to St. James's, and hear the straight, clear-cut addresses near the straight, clear-cut addresses of William S. Rainsford, who is now one of the greatest clerics in New York with a great parish and many clergy under him. He talked business, for his business was to bring ciergy under him. He talked business, for his business was to bring men and women into the church. He had no mannerism—who could have mannerism at twenty-six and be aught else but a fool? And a fool Rainsford was not. He had come to Canada from England unacquainted and unknown. He had preached a mission in London, Ont., and had been invited to Toronto. Here Dean Grasett, the rector of the Cathedral, talked with him, says The Toronto News' Day by Day man. Much impressed by his sincerity, originality and irresistible earnestness, the good dean invited the young Englishman to remain for a time. Rainsford became a guest at the rectory, and there were prepared the clear-cut sermons that went like arrows to men's consciences. He was no born orator: in fact, he was no orator. His addresses, he confesses, and people who were intimate with him beautiful the server in the server in the server was to men's consciences. consciences. He was no born orator: in fact, he was no orator. His addresses, he confesses, and people who were intimate with him, knew at the time, were the product of ceaseless labor. There are some to whom every swan is an ordinary goose, and these took umbrage at the young preacher's methods of preparation. One of his customs was to wander out into the churchyard, and, climbing one of the old trees, to ensconce himself on a comfortable branch. There, with the volumes that he had stowed in his pockets, and his notebook, he would make ready the address that was to electrify his congregation that night. Certain good folk thought it was undignified for a clergyman to climb trees, but Rainsford, if he ever heard of the objecions, took no pains to reply to them. He might have found a fine argument in the case of Zacchens, but he refrained. He was full fine argument in the case of Zac-chens, but he refrained. He was full of animal spirits, and he wanted fresh air. He got it in the tree

The mission lasted four months, and for those four months the Ang-lican churches in Toronto—and some other churches—were awakened as they never had been before. Thousands were turned away every night. Even the chancel was invaded by the auditors; often four hundred per-sons were crowded within the chansons were crowded within the chancel rail. There are men in Toronto:
to-day who will never forget those sermons. They were burned into the mind, not by rant, or mordant reasoning, but by clear-cut Gospel interpretation. One of the men who heard had been a good fellow, a viveur. He changed his ways, and he made no parade about it. Before he died, the citizens of Toronto elected parishioners of St. James' were prishioners of St. James' were priship to their curate. His four years of the in the parish were full of such the interest of the done, for the town was growing away from the Cathedral; there were so Sunday cars to bring worshipers to church, and the long walk was not popular. But the congregation began to fill up when Rainsford resumed work.

His wife gave him valuable assistance. She was a breezy, good-natured, enthusiastic Englishwoman, whose father, a Mr. Green, was one of the proprietors of the famous Green line of steamships plying between Australia and the Mother Country. Mr. Green was able to give his daughter all the help that money brings, and the poor of the parish felt that help many a time. In the summers Mr. and Mrs. Rainsford lived on the Island and the

In the summers Mr. and Mrs. Rainsford lived on the Island, and the stalwart curate never missed his morning spin in a lapstreak boat. At college in England he had been an oarsman of renown. His taste he brought with him to Can-ada, and on Sunday mornings it was whispered that the curate of the Cathedral, on his way over to morning service, had no objection to giving the ferry boat a good race—and beating her, too. Another of his fancies was for dogs—jet black cock er spaniels, that accompanied him on many a tramp over the heights to the north of the city. Many a farmer coming into town was amazed at the spectacle of a six-foot-two clergyman taking a dog-trot along the country road attended by three or four yelping cockers. The man needed plenty of exercise to blow off his superfluous steam. Sprinting and rowing helped him to achieve his end. But, although Rainsford saw nothing evil in the exercise, he frowned down upon some things that were dear to his hearers. He told them that it was wrong to dance—not bethat it was wrong to dance—not because there was anything inherently wicked in the figures—but because the time that might have been spent on good works was wasted. His people ceased to dance. He told them that they should not go to the theatres; and he gave them some reason for his admonition. They stayed away from the playhouses. The congregation became filled with The congregation became filled with all sorts of parish organizations for good, and grew and prospered. Many hoped that some day the young clergyman would be rector of the parish, but fate decreed otherwise.
