No shadow of sorrow had darkened His young life so lovingly fair, For the suns of but two little summers

Had sprinkled their light in his hair The twilight was pressing her forehead And over the hills lay shining

The golden hem of her train. While under the heavy tresses, That swept o'er the dying day, Was hiding his blushes away.

In the hollows that dimple the hill-sides Our feet till the sunset has been, Where pinks, with their spikes of red bloss Hedged beds of blue violets in.

And to the warm lip of the sunbeam The cheek of the blush-rose inclined. While the meek pansy gave its white blossom To the murmuring love of the wind.

Where the air was one warble of music, Of the bird and the bright-belted bee, And the waves going by like swift runners, A-singing the songs of the sea.

But now, in the dim fall of silence, I took up the boy on my knees, And sang him to sleep with a story Of the lambs 'neath the sheltering trees

Oh, when the green kirtle of May-time Again o'er the hill-tops is blown, I shall walk the wild paths of the forest, And climb the steep headlands alone Pausing not where the slopes of the meadows

Are vellow with the cowslip beds, Nor where, by the wall of the garden, The hollyhocks lift their bright heads For, when the full moon of the harvest Stood over the summer's ripe joy,

I held the last time to my bosom Our beautiful blue-eyed boy. And parting away from his forehead The rings of his wannish gold, I sang him to sleep with a story

Of the lambs of the upper fold. When laying his white hands together, And putting his pale lips from ours, We trusted his feet to the pathway

Feeding Poultry.

As I have had three years' experience with some twelve different breeds. I will give my views in this matter. It depends upon the breeds, I think, as to the manner of feeding. All of the Asiatic breeds I will hold a half peck of corn each. I fill one with corn, another with oats, another them at once, and am careful not to let either get empty. I feed all of the large

My smaller breeds I feed in winter, only on one kind of grain, but keep it before where rasping is not practicable, a plank where rasping is not practicable, a plank sant and bantams, as these will not lay in traversed by a heavy roller.

We find that very many of our farmers feed their cattle more than they require, to keep them in good condition, particularly oxen which do not work, and horses that stand in the stable most of the time, except their memory. Much hay in this way is a smart earthquake.

To Kill Crows.

In the winter, or towards spring, the crows are generally very plentiful. Take the entrails of hogs or sheep, or a dead carcass of any kind, and place it at a proper distance behind the barn, or other outbuilding. Then take a two inch auger and bore a hole through some convenient spot, the proper height, and remain inside after they frequent it. Then take a good fow-ling-piece, well loaded, and when the black gents assemble to dine, point the muzzle dead level at the thickest part of the assembly, and let go, and the carnage will be twenty at four shots with a small gun.
