Five of the coal in the United States, his journal pirates have been arrested and brought recording "a coal mine" on the Illinois to Amoy, where they will be beheaded. The Richmond Basin in Virginia was > the first to be mined. Ohio coal beds were discovered in 1755. Pennsylvania gave up its first "black diamonds" in 1790, but official reports of the anthracite coal trade are usually begun with 1820, when 365 tons, or one ton daily average, were shipped to Philadelphia from the Lehigh region. M. R. Campbell, who has prepared a map of the coalfields of the United States, together with a statement regarding the character and geologic age of the coal, estimates the total original supply at 3,157,234,000,000 short tons (of 2,000 pounds). Allowing the total production to the close of 1907 to be a speed of 18.5 knots. 6,865,097,567 tons, or an exhaustion, including waste, of ten thousand million tons, he calculates there are still available 1,993,800,000,000 tons of easily accessible coal. There was thus left in the ground at the close of 1907 a quantity of easily accessible coal 4,150 times the production of the year. Taking the Pennsylvania coalfields alone. Mr. Campbell estimates that if all the anthracite coal were recovered for use, including that now wasted, lost or left in the mines, the supply would last two hundred years at the rate of production in 1907. At a similar rate of production the supply of Pennsylvania's bituminous coal alone would last approximately 490 years. This great distinction of anthracite and bituminous coal, hard and soft, or clear and smoky, appertains chiefly to Pennsylvania and the Atlantic States, for outside the 480 square miles of the well known anthracite region of Pennsylvania in the counties of Susquehanna, Lackawanna, Luzerne, Carbon, Schuylkill, Columbia, Northumberland, Dauphin and Sullivan there is hardly any true anthracite found elsewhere in the United States. In two small areas in the Rocky Mountain region coal has been locally anthracited, but the production has never amounted to as much as 100,000 tons in any year.
