THE IRISH SITUATION. Once more Ireland is the stormy fairs, as indeed she always seems des- the interest of the public morals that trail, if I can have a good square dintined to be.

That the men and the women of Ulster are grimly determined to resist any form of Home Rule is now more apparent than ever and on top one case?" of this there has come the deeply significent fact of the resignation of a large number of officers of the regular forces, rather than serve against Ulster forces, should such be brought into action. This move of course might ultimately lead to court martials and the situation is unparalleled in the modern days of the British army. Lord Randolph Churchill's historic phrase "Ulster will fight and Ulster will be right" is evidently the slogan of the vast majority of the people in the most northerly province of the Emerald Isle, and in addition to them are many other announced sympathizers and much money for defence purposes from all quarters of the world. All those who know the unswerving sense of duty of officers in the British service can appreciate the tensity of feeling which has led to a step practically in defiance of the King. Meanwhile, the position of the Asquith Government is most perilous, They are pledged to the passage of Home Rule before the holding of a general election. If they abandon that plan their administration will be many defections of officers and men events of the next few days will be awaited with the deepest anxiety.

Her Experience Was a Very Sad One-Never Again For Martha.

Do not judge from mere appearances, for the light laughter that bubbles on the lip often mantles over the depth of sadness, and the serious look may be the sober veil that covers a divine peace and joy. The bosom may ache beneath diamond brooches, and many a blithe heart dances under coarse Assuming the above to be true, we will proceed to tear a page from the life diary of Mrs. Weaver and present it to our readers.

That New Suit. "What am I going to do about that new suit I must have?" said Martha Weaver to her husband as he came in from work one evening. "Why is there any question about that? Go to Hopkins & Co. and get what you need. If you need a suit get it," answered her husband. "I have looked there," replied Martha, "but they haven't anything that I want. I just need a simple suit, but I want good material, and it must be neatly and well made, one that I could use for almost any occasion. I would prefer a ready made suit, but those that Hopkins & Co. have appear to be made of poor, flimsy material, and they are decked out with such cheap, flashy, dowdy trimming that I just cannot bear to wear them," replied Martha.

The False Step. "Well, what do you want to do-run into the city and get you a suit?"

asked John. "No. That does not suit me either, for when I have to pay my fare, my hotel bill and other incidental expenses it makes the cost too high and also takes more time than I can spare for the purchase of one suit," said Martha. "Could you not order one? Didn't I see some mail order catalogues around here awhile ago?" asked the interested husband. "Yes; I could do that, but I am almost afraid to risk it. Still, their styles appear to be good, and the prices quoted seem reasonable. I have been thinking about doing that. I will look them up again and see what I can do," answered Martha.

Martha's Heart Sank. Martha had little difficulty in "looking up" the catalogue, as the house seemed full of them, and after critically examining the suit pictures a simple blue took her fancy. The description corresponded with her idea of what she wanted; the trimming looked neat and of good quality. The price was satisfactory, so after debating for some little time she decided to send for it. A draft was forwarded, and the long vigil pending the arrival of the suit was as depressing upon John as upon Martha.

At last it came-express bill and all -and eagerly the box was opened and the suit laid on the bed for inspection. logue. The color was not good. There was too much coat and not enough skirt, and, besides, the skirt was not draped as the advertisement said. It just hung, and hung uneven at that A meeting of the Sydenham St. The work was not neat; the trimming ed to wear that suit at home, much less among her well dressed friends. What was she to do? She needed a suit badly, but she realized that to attempt an exchange would result as disastrously as in the first place, and she could ill afford another new one.

Defects More Pronounced. The longer Martha had the suit the more numerous and pronounced became its defects, until at last her pride rebelled, and she refused longer to wear the miserable parody. She said she would much prefer to wear a "good" old suit than a "poor" new one. For with the poor new one she was conscious and ashamed when she felt any one looking at her or her suit. Mr. and Mrs. Weaver held a consultation, after which Mrs. Weaver declared that never again in her life would she buy anything from a picture or from a catalogue house.

"Amen," said John. "We have had our lesson. Had you bought that garment from any of our local merchants and it proved unsatisfactory he would have insisted on your exchanging it or refunding to you your money."
