Could we read the hearts of every man we meet, what a load of sorrow and despair would be disclosed. Indiscretions and Blood Diseases have caused more physical and mental wrecks than all other causes combined. They strike at the foundation of manhood; they sap the vital forces; they undermine the system, and not only do they often disrupt the family circle, but they may even extend their poisonous fangs to the next generation. If you have been a victim of early sinistral habits, remember the need is here, and sooner or later you will reap a harvest. If your blood has been diseased from any cause do not risk a return later on. Our New Method Treatment will positively cure you and you need never fear any return of the disease. We will give you a guarantee bond to that effect. We would warn you against the promiscuous use of mercury, which does not cure blood poisons but simply suppresses the symptoms.

Man as an Incarnation.

PEOPLE of a materialistic frame of mind, to whom man is but a machine, have an editorial written in the "Herald" are apt to put on one side all the things that are not weighed and measured as only inexpressible or unthinkable as a quite beyond the range of material discussion. Such people are ready to attend a meeting of the Society for Psychical Research for "a change of scene." What they will see is thus described:

"There they will find people, quite as convinced as they are of their own sanity, and quite as content as they can possibly be with the correctness of their own interpretation of things, asserting the most astounding propositions, without turning a hair. To those who are so self-centered as to think that there is something cranky about all who do not see as they do, it is a wholesome, weakening tonic to find, solid, comfortable, and respectable people believing in telepathy as a thing indisputable, and holding that man, as we see him engaged in his various more or less ignominious pursuits, in the city and elsewhere, is but the incarnation of one little bit of himself as he exists in an intangible and ethereal form. At the last meeting of the Psychical Research Society, Dr. Oliver Lodge, F.R.S., said that he did not hold that the whole of any one of us was incarnated in their terrestrial bodies; certainly not in childhood; more, but perhaps not so very much more, in adult life. What was manifest was only a definite portion of a much larger whole. What the rest was doing during the years spent here he did not know. Perhaps it was asleep; but probably, he said, it was not entirely asleep with men of genius, nor perhaps was it all completely inactive with people called mediums. Now in the modern materialist all this is absolute 'rot.' Yet Dr. Lodge is not exactly a man to pooh-pooh. Indeed, may not the immaterialist retort that this is a Christian country and that our very religion teaches us not to weigh and measure too exactly? Again, Roentgen, Tesla, and Marconi have of late been giving many shocks to old ideas. At any rate, this is clear, that we must not too rigidly put outside the bounds of sanity belief in the unthinkable. It is a queer world, and which half of it is sane appears still undecided."

An English Departure in Insurance.

A CORRESPONDENT writing from London under date of February 15 says: "One queer phase of the present smallpox scare is the smallpox insurance department, opened at Lloyd's. The current rates are 2-1/2 per cent. if recently vaccinated, and 3-1/2 if not vaccinated since infancy. The insurance becomes due on the doctor's certificate that the policy-holder has smallpox." He adds: "After joggling along comfortably with smallpox in its midst for six months, London is now beginning to get worried, and a large contributing cause of that worry is that if the plague spreads much more it is going to frighten away the profitable American cousin, who is expected to come over in unprecedented numbers for the coronation season and scatter dollars right and left. Trouble began away back in August, and has been slowly growing off and on, ever since, until the average lately has been about 50 new cases a day. One day last week it ran up to 82. There were 138 new cases in September, 339 in October, 473 in November, 594 in December, and 1,236 in January. Yet, according to previous experience, smallpox reaches its height in London from January to May. Consequently it would be well for readers planning a trip to see King Edward's crown put on to watch the smallpox returns from London for the next four or five weeks. The present plague can be said to be well under control, but a big sudden increase would tax London's resources to the utmost and might cause a panic."

Onions and Epidemics.

A READER of "Marmaduke's" letter in London "Truth" has sent him the following: "As there is an epidemic of smallpox in London it has occurred to me to send this to you, for some of your medical readers may be either able to prove or disprove the statements it contains."

"Onions and Epidemics.—In the spring of 1849 I was in charge of one hundred men on shipboard, with the cholera among the men. We had onions, which a number of the men ate freely. Those who did so were soon attacked, and nearly all died. As soon as I made this discovery their use was forbidden. After mature deliberation I came to the conclusion that onions should never be eaten during the prevalence of epidemics, for the reason that they absorb the virus, and communicate the disease, and that the proper use for them is sliced and placed in the sick-room, and replaced with fresh ones every few hours. After maintaining the foregoing opinion for eighteen years, I have found the following well attested: Onions placed in the room where there is smallpox will blister and decompose with great rapidity; not only so, but will prevent the spread of the disease. I think that as a disinfectant they have to be equalled properly used. If needed, the foregoing (which I have greatly abbreviated) can be attested on oath."

It is a curious echo of a hygienic preventive, and it is given here without much hope that the suggestion can be valuable.

The Eclipse Cyclopedia.

The remarkable discovery that a total eclipse of the sun develops a total air cyclone as the shadow sweeps across the earth has been made by Mr. H. C. Clayton through a study of the meteorological phenomena observed during the eclipse of May, 1900. During the eclipse the winds were practically reversed in direction as the umbra moved from one side of the continent to the other, and there was an outflow of air from the shadow to a distance of 1,500 miles. As the shadow progressed about 2,000 miles an hour, it must have continuously formed within the shadow and must have dissipated in the rear almost instantly. Mr. Clayton believes that this discovery indicates that the fall of temperature at night must tend to produce a cold air cyclone, while the heat of day tends to the production of a warm air one, and thus the puzzling phenomenon of the double diurnal period in air pressure receives an explanation.

An Interesting Gourd Experiment.

The large gourds which our mothers used for storing salt, eggs, etc., are indigenous to Kentucky and were grown by people who lived in this country long before its discovery by the white man.

A couple of years since I secured one of these gourds from a cave in southern Kentucky. From the articles alongside of it it was apparent that it had been there more than 400 years. I have recently opened the gourd and taken out the seed, and I am planting some of them in the hope that they will germinate. I have several bunches of which I have placed with The Courier-Journal. Anybody sending a 2 cent stamp to pay the postage will have two of these gourd seeds sent to them for planting. I am in hopes that in this way we shall be able to reproduce this gourd that was grown in Kentucky before Columbus discovered the new world.—Bennett H. Young

The Bacillus Inquisition Goes On.

Dr. Cereale bought specimens of lettuce, endive, radish and celery in the market at Padua, such as would be used for eating after a rough washing. He then washed them in sterilized water and examined the sediment. A simple microscope survey revealed a fauna of 82 species, comprising amoebae, anguillulae and the eggs of tenia, oxyuris, ascarides and ankylostoma. Bacteriologic investigation added a rich flora of varied microbes, including micrococci, staphylococci, streptococci, and a wealth of bacilli.—Medical Magazine.

The Origin of the Loving Cup.

THE loving cup is very common nowadays, and we see it everywhere. But many years ago there were no such things as these queer three-handled affairs, and the following story tells how they first happened to be made:

Once upon a time centuries before us, there lived a great and powerful king, who was extremely fond of hunting. He was one day in a forest pursuing a stag, but it was so fleet and clever that it eluded him and his band of followers, and led them entirely out of their way. After wandering about in a hopeless fashion they finally came upon a little hut, and the king himself dismounted and rapped smartly upon the door.

A young girl answered his knock, and soon showed the men the right path. The king was about to go, when he saw a well near the house, and at the sight of the clear water immediately felt thirsty, and, going back, asked the girl for a drink. Without hesitation she went into the house and came out with an earthen jug filled with the well water. But, instead of offering his royal majesty the handle, as most people would do, she held that herself, and handed him the cup the wrong way.

The king said nothing, thanked the girl, and he and his band soon found their way out of the wood.

But when he reached his palace he determined to reward the girl for giving him the water and at the same time to teach her a lesson in politeness. Sending to his jeweler, he bade him make a silver cup, with two handles, and deliver it to the young girl, without a word as to whence it came. The king again hunted in that same forest, sought the hut and asked the girl for another drink of water.

This time she entered the house and came out with a beautiful silver cup, full of the sparkling water. "Now," thought the king, "she has certainly learned a lesson." But never again he made a mistake, for the poor, ignorant girl took a handle in each hand, and for the second time offered her liege lord nothing save the side of the cup. So the king rode away, disappointed. He resolved to teach the girl the polite way to hand a cup without directly rebuking her, and many were the hours he spent in cudgeling his brains for some way in which to do it. At last a bright idea struck him, and he sent for his jeweler a second time. "Make me," said he to the man, "a silver cup, heavily chased, and with my royal crest, and put three handles on it." The jeweler, much surprised—for remember, no such thing had ever been heard of up to this time—did as he was told, and soon the mug was finished. As before, the king had it privately sent to the girl who lived in the little hut.

One day not long after this for the third time he rode into that forest, and taking the now well-known path, soon reached the cottage. Dismounting, he knocked at the door and asked humbly for a drink of clear water.

The girl immediately came out with the beautiful three-handled cup, and, taking two of the handles in her hands, she offered him the side.

So the king rode away, well pleased with his strategy and, reaching home, ordered three-handled cups to be made in every sort of ware, and they became so popular that we now have them in all our shops and stores.

An Unfortunate Experiment.

SOME years ago there lived in Turin a physician noted far and wide as a specialist of brain diseases. Men and women came to him from the ends of the earth. With the development of fortune, for his fees were in proportion to his prominence, he cultivated a pleasing taste for those precious relics of antiquity in which the millionaires alone are privileged to indulge. He had in his library a collection of costly objects of art. The fauna of his treasures was loved in the world's eye, following him from store to store, continually guarding her reputation against the encroachment of her fingers. Though it had cost him thousands, his wife knew nothing, suspected nothing of her own weakness. Nor should she ever know if he could prevent it.

"If I brought her here to consult you as a physician," said the afflicted husband, "I fear she would suspect something and it would kill her. If you will permit I'll bring her to call on you as a collector of antiquities. Do not be disconcerted, however, if during the interview you find her piffling, slipping your relics and coins into her umbrella or pockets. This is the saddest, and, of course, whatever she takes will be returned to you at once. My references are 60 and 60, bankers." This with much civility and the production of documents.

The physician made the appointment, and next day the couple came. The doctor brought out his treasures, wonderful coins, antique jewelry, on which he doted with much graceful learning. Every now and then the lady slipped into her pocket or dropped into her parasol a coin, a jewel, a vase, and as she did so her husband winked at the doctor to draw attention to her. When the physician finally gave the signal that he had learned all he required, she had accumulated the rarest of his possessions.

"I'll be back within an hour," said the Chinese banker, "with the things my wife has taken. Poor, poor girl!" he burst out. "Doctor, my fortune, my life are yours if you can but cure her." Two hours passed, then three, then the interval lengthened to five. The physician, rather alarmed, sent his servant to the American's hotel. No persons of the name were staying there. The police were called in, descriptions given, detectives went forth. They identified the culprit, who had time to make her escape. They were London pickpockets, two thieves whose characters and depredations were notorious all over England.

"Why do you call the fast bicycle rider a scorcher?" "Because he goes at a house, makes pedestrians boiling mad, warms up the police, gets roasted in court, and then thinks the whole thing is a burning shame."—"Tit-Bits."
