Law and Order

If there is one factor more than another that has made for the solid and continuous growth of the British Empire, it has been the respect that has been shown for the will of the majority of the people as expressed in law. Though the struggles have often lasted for many years in achieving the desired end, when crystallized in law, the citizens have in general always supported and sustained such enactments.

World conditions today are not tending toward respect and regard for law or for constituted authority. There seems to be a general spirit of unrest and instability. Often it would seem that the individualistic views—selfish views often—have been transferred to groups and that these, even large groups, seemed animated only by a spirit of getting all possible that will benefit themselves or their own group without any consideration of the effects of such action upon others or other lines of dependent industry. No more outstanding example of such action is at hand than that of the coal miners in this country as well as in Great Britain. At present the outlook is most foreboding in the Old Land. The revolutionary tendencies in Ireland and the great strike of the mine workers in which the railway and transport men are also (at this writing) about to participate, presents a most difficult problem.

In America there are conditions brewing that also evidence this spirit of unrest, and in the U. S. especially, are the violations of law and order most flagrant. It would seem that while the nations are exhausted by the last great struggle and every country wishes to avoid war, yet the internal conditions of each nation presents the gravest problems. If we are not to have a rule of anarchy in many of the greatest nations, there must be a return to the good old rule, to that great factor of accomplishing reforms by Constitutional means that has signalized the forward march of the great British people, rather than the resort to force of arms and sanguinary measures.

But how to do it is the question—and when one traces it to its source the problem is one really for the home, the school and the community. If there is no home, nor home life, if the responsibilities arising from family ties are shirked and the so-called cream of society live only for their own pleasure, what can be expected of those who as a rule only imitate those upon the next higher round of the social ladder? It would seem if modern nations are to avoid the decadence and fall that marked the ancient empires of Greece and Rome, there must be a return to family life. Citizens must realize that only in the preservation of the home and its sacred ties can the community, the nation, the Empire be preserved for future advancement and growth, and thus the world at large move forward to better and higher things.

Now to ourselves—how do any of the foregoing points apply? There must be a more intimate acquaintance of parents with children, and better parental control. This was brought forcefully before many of our citizens by the recent address of Magistrate E. N. Barker concerning delinquency among the youth. Parents fail to realize, in far too many cases, that indulgence and yielding to the fancies and whims of our children does not develop them, does not aid them in the struggle of life or the meeting of its difficulties. Unless there is respect for parental authority there is very little for civil authority, either in the school or the town, the city or the province.

If we are to have stable and just government too, there must be enforcement of law, as pointed out by Premier Stewart in his receipt of the Social Service Committee's requests as to the enforcement of the law concerning prohibition, there is a responsibility upon the electorate. Whenever any matter of public concern is made law, we should uphold and respect that law and lend our influence and aid for its enforcement. We cannot sit down quietly and fold our hands and feel that it is no concern of ours and expect good results from any law. The people must show that they are interested and that they respect the will of the majority as expressed in the law or we are failing to do our full duty. We are too apt to place the blame on officials and to shirk our own responsibilities in regard to law enforcement. The signs and portents are ominous for the future in all democratic governments unless the citizens keep alive to their responsibilities.

Our duty as parents and as citizens is to support the law and aid wherever necessary in its enforcement here in our own town. There is work for our Civic Club here as well as our Parent's organizations. A social betterment committee selected from the Civic Club, the churches, the fraternal societies, making it truly representative of our whole people, could work wonders for the boys and girls who are growing up in our community and district and who are to be the voters of tomorrow. Who will make the first move? THE GLOBE will do all possible to aid in the work, and there is no greater than the making of law-abiding citizens.

Truly things are out of joint these days, but sometimes these peculiarities as to conditions are favorable to some people. Those buying seed grain this spring are finding the market prices much less than last fall. The man who sold all his wheat at $2.00 per bush the last few days, so that he is ahead 50c per bushel. That is exactly the opposite of the usual rule.

Get ready for the spring clean up.
This is the time to plant trees.
The half-holiday commences a week from Wednesday.
Get that garden ready.

"Grey Sox" Tubes

High Average Mileage

Sometimes you find a tire that gives extraordinary mileage—one in a dozen perhaps. Whereas the average of mileage given by a dozen—or a hundred—Ames Holden "Auto-Shoes" will be as high as that given by the exceptional ordinary tire. It's the high average that counts—that cuts the cost of miles—that makes it worth while to get Ames Holden "Auto-Shoes" instead of ordinary tires.
