

CROSSING THE FLOOD.

There is a stream, whose narrow tide
The known and unknown worlds divide Where all must go;
The waves are dark and deep,
And all alike descend to sweep,
With ceaseless flow.

I saw where, at the dizzy flood,
A smiling infant prattling stood,
Whose hair had come Fearless of it around the side,
Seek as to cradle-rest and die,
Like going home.

Followed, with length of arm,
A youth, dressed, and pale, and wan;
And there alone,
He gazed upon the leaping stream,
And feared to plunge—I heard a scream,
And he was gone.

And then a faint but steady strength,
Came bustling on till, there at length,
He saw life's bound;
He struck and raised the little boy,
Too late—his shriek of wild despair,
The water drowned.

Next stood upon the surging shore,
A being bearded, many a score Of tolling years,
Earth-bound and he left the bank,
Bent twice his dimming eyes and sank,
As if of lead.

How bitter woe thy waters be!
O' death I how hard a thing, ah! me,
It is to die,
I moved—when to the stream again
Another child of mortal men, Whom smiles drew nigh.

"To this last pit," he calmly said,
"To me, O death, thou hast no dread; Savior, I come!
Spread but thine arm on yonder shore—
So ye waters bear me o'er—
There is my home."

A MISTAKE IN THE WEIGHT.—Another
Wyman was like Lord Byron in one respect.
He had a great horror of growing fat.
What added to his apprehensions on this score, was the fact that his father, before he died, attained a degree of rotundity which would have enabled him to fill respectably the office of Alderman.

Andrew stood five feet eight inches in his stockings, and weighed one hundred and forty-five pounds—a very respectable weight —within which he endeavored to keep himself, by the free use of vinegar and other acids, which are reported to diminish any tendency to pinguity.

Andrew was in the habit of weighing himself once a fortnight, in order to make sure that he was not transgressing proper bounds.
He had been absent from home more than a week, and just stepped out of the cars in the depot, when his attention was attracted by an instrument for determining the weight.

Mechanically he placed himself on the platform, and adjusted the weight to one hundred and forty-five. To his surprise he found it not sufficient.

With an air of alarm he had advanced it five pounds—still indifferent. Imagine his consternation when the scales fell at one hundred and seventy five!

My stars! said he to himself, "There can't be any mistake about it—I've gained thirty-five pounds within a fortnight! I was afraid it would be so. It was with my father before me. At this rate I shall go beyond him in a few weeks."

He entered the house with an air of settled melancholy upon his face, much excited to greet his wife, who had come forth to meet him, and who, when she saw the matter, "Why Andrew—what's the matter?" she asked.

"Matter enough!" he groaned. "I weigh one hundred and seventy five pounds!
Gained thirty pounds within a fortnight—or at the rate of fifteen per week. Suppose I should go on at this rate, or even at ten pounds per week, in three months I will be perfect matter. I am the most unfortunate of men."

"I am sure that you don't look any larger," said Mrs. Wyman. "You don't find that your clothes have grown small for you."
"Why no."
"I'll tell you what, Mr. Wyman," said his wife, struck with a sudden idea, "are you sure you didn't have your valise in your hand when you were weighed?"
Andrew's face brightened up.
"Wait a minute," said he.
He sped out of the house like an arrow—flew to the depot, and renewed the experiment.

A moment after he entered the house again his face glowing with joy.
"You've hit it, wife," he exclaimed.
"I've weighed myself again, and weighed only one hundred and sixty-three."

Boiled Potatoes.—Cut cold boiled potatoes in slices lengthwise, quarter of an inch thick; dip each slice in wheat flour, and lay them on a gridiron over a bright fire of coals; when both sides are browned nicely, take them on a hot dish, add a bit of butter, pepper and salt to taste and serve hot.

A gentleman travelling inside a coach, was endeavoring with considerable earnestness, to impress some argument upon a fellow passenger who was seated in the same vehicle, and who appeared rather dull-of-apprehension; at length, being slightly irritated, he exclaimed—"Why sir, it's as plain as A B C!" "That may be," quietly replied the other, "but I am DEF."

An Old Proverb Fulfilled.—On the 15th instant
Mr. Benjamin Bird, a bachelor, aged 70 years, was married at the Roman Catholic church on Fifth street, Cincinnati, Ohio, to Mrs. John Chase, a beautiful widow of 39. So the old proverb was fulfilled.

The man who tried to sweeten his tea with one of his wife's smiles, has "fallen back" on sugar. (Nothing like first principles after all.)
