Lady Gathorn's Crofters in the North-West Territory.

(From the Scottish Highlander, Oct. 1886.)

A young lady belonging to Inverness, who has just returned from a visit of fifteen months to the great North-West Territory, supplies our representative with the following particulars of her residence there and the impressions she was led to form with respect to the extent, customs, and resources of the country. We give the narrative as nearly as possible in the young lady's own words:

Tell you something of the nature and circumstances of the place where I resided? Oh, well, it is known under the rather peculiar-sounding name of Moomin, and the people are the Scotch crofters who were led to form with respect to the extent, customs, and resources of the country. We give the narrative as nearly as possible in the young lady's own words:
