Now let me think a minute or two, where did we leave off, I and you? I would have written "You and I." Little Reader if it had rhymed. Oh, yes, now I remember. Dear Uncle Lucky was in the dwarf's cave, having escaped from Danny Fox in the last story.

"Follow me," said the leader of the six little men, and he led Uncle Lucky back through the long passage until they reached the little trap door in the floor of the Old Hollow Stump.

"I'll go out and look about. You stay right down here. Don't you make a bit of noise. That Danny Fox might hear."

and with this warning, the dwarf carefully lifted the trap door and stepped inside the Old Hollow Stump. Cautiously peeping through a knot hole, he looked here and there and everywhere, but never a tip of an ear or a hair of crafty Danny Fox did he see. Then looking up in the Big Chestnut Tree, he spied Squirrel Nutcracker.

"Where's Danny Fox gone?" asked the dwarf.

"Home, with a bump on his head," answered the wise old squirrel. "I dropped a brick on it just as he was about to catch nice Uncle Lucky."

"Then I'll bring the dear old gentleman bunny out in the sunlight," said the dwarf, and opening the trap door, he helped happy Uncle Lucky up the stairway and into the Old Hollow Stump. The next minute, with a hop-tidy, the nimble old gentleman rabbit hopped out and on to the Shady Forest Trail.

"You've done me a good turn, both of you," exclaimed dear Uncle Lucky, wiping his eyes with his blue silk pocket handkerchief. "How can I thank you?"

"Just sing us a song," answered the dwarf. "Yes, sing us a song," repeated Squirrel Nutcracker.

"Wait till I take a lollipop cough-drop," answered the obliging old gentleman rabbit. "Have one!" and he tossed a couple to his two kind friends. Then in maybe a minute or two, dear Uncle Lucky began:

"There's a dear little mouse

Who takes care of my house,
And I know she is waiting for me
With a catch in her breath
And just worried to death
For fear I'll be home late for tea."

And with a hop, skip and jump the dear old gentleman rabbit hopped into the Lucky mobile and drove away.

"Goodness gracious mebus," he exclaimed, as he came in sight of his red-shingled house on the corner of Lettuce Avenue and Carrot Street, "there she is at the window."

"Well, here I am, safe and sound."

Tired old bunny man went to sleep in his comfortable armchair.

he shouted the next minute, as he opened the kitchen door. "Please telephone to Lady Love and Little Jack Rabbit that I had an accident and can't come over till I've eaten my supper and parted my hair and taken a nap in my old armchair," and while his kind little mouse housekeeper was calling up the Old Bramble Patch to explain Uncle Lucky's delay, the dear, tired old bunny man went to sleep in his comfortable armchair, his weary feet in his old carpet slippers and his blue silk pocket handkerchief over his face to keep off the flies. And in the next story you shall hear what happened after that.

Household Notes.

Cut cucumbers lengthwise in stick form and serve with oil and salt.
Wrap the cut surface of cheese with cheesecloth wet with vinegar.
Never cover cabbage while cooking—allow the volatile oils to escape.
As breakfast fruit, halved, pitted peaches can be served like cantaloupe.
Plain lettuce is nice served with maple syrup as a dessert course.

A nice relish at the Sunday night supper is celery stuffed with cream cheese.

Have you ever served boiled macaroni or spaghetti with onion sauce?
