MEMORY.

France-German Frontier Incident That Moved Soldier to Tears.

Relations between the French and Germans have considerably improved of late years, and can even be described as cordial, but this does not mean that the lost provinces have been entirely forgotten on this side of the frontier, as the following touching story, which The Patrie has just received from its correspondent at Saint Die, in the Vosges, will show: A detachment of chasseurs-a-pied was marching the other day close to the frontier when it perceived just across the border a farm-house, on a bench in front of which a man was sitting. He was a soldier, too, and catching sight of the French sergeant he rose to his feet, stood at attention, and saluted in accordance with the rule in such a case. Barely twenty yards away the rifleman watched him fixedly, taking in every detail of his uniform and accoutrements, and at last, yielding to an uncontrollable impulse, they removed their kepis, and, waving them aloft, shouted "Vive la France!" So moved was the German soldier by this demonstration that, covering his face with his hands, he burst into tears. The tall, fair-haired man, who looked barely eighteen years of age, was an Alsatian, and the sergeant, as soon as he had realized the fact, addressing the chasseurs in low and sad tones, said, "Come along, boys, let us be off; we must not tempt the poor fellow. Only cowards desert." A moment later the detachment was leaving the spot, but the Frenchmen as they looked mournfully back, beheld the man, who was still standing on the other side of the boundary, sobbing as if his heart would break.—Paris Correspondence of London Telegraph.

Adventures of Three Women.

Three women started out to be loved. The first woman chose a millionaire. The second woman chose a poet. The third woman said, "I'll wait." The first woman, having found a suitable millionaire, set her cap for him. But the millionaire was wily and not to be won so easily. "It is evident to me," he said, "from this girl's anxiety that she is extremely desirous of marrying me. She has set out with this idea in her head, and this very fact irritates me into an obstinacy that I shouldn't have under other circumstances, because she is certainly very beautiful."

So he hung off until the woman gave it up as a bad job. The second woman several times thought she had found a poet, but in each instance was deceived, for he turned out to be nothing but either an advertisement rhymist or a writer for the magazines, who could easily make enough to support her. Finally, however, she found the real thing, but the poet, who was a real poet, would have none of her. "My poetry," he said, "is too sacred to be infringed upon. It is not at all, you see, like the copyright law. In my most enraptured moments you would bore me to death. No, no!"

So the second woman went off in despair and sought the first woman, and they went together until curiosity prompted them to seek the third woman, whom they found, much to their surprise, happily married to a millionaire who had just published a volume of real poetry. "Why, how happens it," exclaimed the first and second woman, "that you are married and we are not?" "Being married," said the third woman, with a condescending smile, "You couldn't wait, you know, and I could."

The Patriarch Must Go.

There are 33 fine buffaloes in the Dominion herd at East National Park. All are in splendid condition. There are 14 full-grown bulls and one old patriarch is 30 years of age. He was the first animal to be owned by Lord Strathcona at Silver Heights, where all the animals now in confinement in the West, came from. This animal is of historic importance. Very soon he will be shot, and then he will be mounted. He had been a mighty fighter, and had retained the leadership of the herd throughout many years, until two years ago, when he met his Waterloo. Old as he was, his immense bulk and strength enabled him to kill one antagonist, and to nearly dispose of another. Had it not been that he broke his horn on a rock, the issue would probably have been different. The bull which now rules the herd is one imported from Silver Heights, and which defeated all the other bulls, one by one.

A Second London.

The chief desire of the municipality of Bairo, in Chile, is to have their town known as a second London, and money has been spent to make it an exact replica of the British capital. The streets have been laid down and named after those in London.
