FAMOUS PRIZE

Mme. Henri Lapauze, as "Daniel Lesueur," Awarded Vitet Decoration.

Paris, July 21 .- For the first time, the Vitet prize, most coveted of all literary awards made by the Academie Francaise, has just been given to a woman, Madame Henri Lapauze, who writes under the name af "Daniel Lesueur." Her latest novel, "La Force du Passe," which has had a success even greater than that of her previous works, doubtless contributed to winning for her this honor. But what makes the Vitet prize particularly valuable is that it is not awarded for any single work, but for the whole of one's literary production to date, which must consequently be maintained at a high level of excellence. Only the most eminent French authors have received this prize since its foundation twenty-nine years ago. Among the former beneficiaries may be mentioned Paui Bourget, Pierre Loti, Guy de Maupassant, Andre Theuriet, Francois Coppee, Anatole France, Jules Lemai-On one occasion the prize was divided between Jules Claretie and Madame Blanc, but only for "Daniel Lesueur" have men been set completey aside that a woman might win it. Daniel Lesueur has for several years ast been recognized as holding foremost rank in French letters.

first became known as the translator of Byron's poems in French, and soon began writing fiction. Her French is markably pure, free from all the taints of carelessness which mar the works of many of her contemporaneous French authors. Her stories are, moreover, clean and optimistic in tone so as to appeal particularly to Americans. She possesses, in common with most women, the art of telling stories well. But whereas the characters us ually developed by women in stories are fantastical and lend themselves to improbable situations, Daniel Lesueur has the instinct of the few truy great women writers for prehension of character and analysis of sentiment. She believes not simply in constructing plots, but in allowing events to follow in their logical se-Her strongest trait as re nence. vealed in her writings is confidence in mankind as a whole, and where she must deal with unpleasant people she opposes to them others loyal and ealthy in mind, who can live and love and suffer without being embittered or weakened

Though still a young woman, Daniel Lesueur has written no less than 20 novels, among the most popular being "A Tragic Life," "Invincible Charm," "A Woman's Honor," "The Marquis de Valcor," and "Madame de Fren-Daniel Lesueur was among the pio neers of the feminist movement encouraging women's ights in the vulgar acceptation of the

> LIGHTNING-CHANGE THIEF Didn't Like One Man's Clothes, So

He Took Another. New York, July 22. - When the bold thief, who went to Peter Berringer's home, 979 First avenue, Monday, and left his old clothes, walking off with Berringer's new ones, the police sleuths thought they had a clue in letters they found in the old coat. The letters were addressed to Jacob Schmedinger. Besides the letters. there were citizenship papers, and recommendation of Schmedinger as

It didn't take the police long to trace Schmedinger to 109 Third avenue, with the aid of Engineer Edmonds, of the Lucerne Hotel, who had signed the recommendation papers.
"I have come to offer Schmedinger a job," said Edmonds at the instruction of the sleuths, when the man's sister opened the door.

ger got together and decided the same thief had robbed both of them. Schmedinger got back his letters,
