Stirrett Stars.

Jo Jo Stirrett played an outstanding game for the Londoners, both defensively and offensively, and he was the somewhat heavy-footed Nemesis who harried the fleet Karn time after time by guessing what the Sarnia quarter was about to unload, and going by the straightest and most direct rout to block it. Somerville, too, played a heady game and spilled many an attack. The London half-line showed an edge in speed and balance over the visiting halves, though this was offset by low booting, which gave the opposition time to run punts for gains on the aerial exchanges, and the London outsides very little time to get down, although the London tackling was sure and effective when given a chance. The fective when given a chance. Stirrett Stars. the London tackling was sure and effective when given a chance. The Sarnia punting was well timed, neither too high nor with too much distance, and it gave the Sarnia ends, especially Manore, a chance for some deadly tackling, and kept the London halves continually harassed and cooped up. Each one of the local backs, particularly Foster, made some brilliant runs, if short, out through encircling tacklers.

Deliberate Booting. Somerville did most of the booting for London, and though not himself in the few days of drill he has had, refused to be hurried in his booting and got off a few in cool deliberate fashion that gained definite ground for the Londoners. Starting out at a break-neck pace, the Marconis made three runs in the first two spasms, but after that they could not meet Clark's offerings to any good effect. Self made a muff on P. Mascari's hit. Baratta slapped out a two-bagger to left, Mascari taking third. On Catalano's grounder, Pook dropped a throw, and Mascari counted. The ninth inning saw the Marconis one run ahead. E. Clark drooped down a bunt, and should have been out, but Catalano's throw to first base hit him. Pook bunted towards third base. Baratta could have had him at first, but tried for Clark at second the throw being wide and both runners being safe. Then came the turning roint, when Moisse drove the hall to right, scoring Clark.
