OBITUARY

Unfortunate Expression. Although our new war secretary, Lord Milner, cannot exactly be said to shine his a humorist, he can enjoy a good story against himself, as witness the following, which he is fond of reliable.

Poland's Long-Lost Crown.

When the Prussians took possession of Cracow, in 1794, the Polish kingsoom, ceased to exist. The king of Prussia coveted the traditional diadem of Poland's kings for his own adornment. It had, however, disappeared mysterfonsly, and the Prussian king was baiked of his wish. In January, 1914, seven months before the world war broke out, during a severe storm, lightning struck a stately elm close to the city and brought to light a secret trensure which had lain burled at its roots for 123 years, the long-lost crown of Poland.

Scenery on the Way.

Writing home from France a St.
Louis soldier says:

"The first days out I was seasick, later I was homesick, but before the end of the trip I was feeling fine.

"There was a negro-battalion in the fore part of the ship and a white one aft. I think I saw every kind of a fish on the way across."

Marseilles Peanut Center.
Marseilles, France, is the great central, market, for peanuts, more than 120,000 metric tons of peanuts in the shell and 240,000 tons of shelled nuts being crushed there in a single year.
