

The Church.

AND THOUGHTS FOR EVERY DAY THROUGHOUT THE YEAR.

AUGUST 12.—TENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

1. The Lord forbid it me that I should give thee the inheritance of my fathers. 1 Kings xii. 3.

2. Haat then killed and also taken possession. 1 Kings xxi. 19.

3. The triumphing of the wicked is short. Although Ahab had taken no active part in Ahab's death, yet Elijah charges the whole upon him.

4. I Because he humbled himself before me, I will not bring the evil in his days. 1 Kings xxi. 29.

5. All approaches to good are from God, even the smallest. It is a simple and easy thing to us to say that Jesus is the Lord; yet we could not do it without the inward influence of the Holy Spirit.

6. No man can say that Jesus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghost. 1 Cor. xii. 3.

7. There are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. 1 Cor. xii. 4.

8. The gifts bestowed on different souls, or the different gifts to the same soul, vary in every conceivable degree.

their ruin through unbelief, pitied their doom and, as a brother in the flesh, wept at its prospect; O compassionate Saviour, thou remainest ever the same.

AUGUST 16.

1. But now they are hid from their sight. Luke xix. 42.

2. My house is the house of prayer, but you have made it a den of thieves. Luke xix. 46.

3. These were the words of Jehoshaphat to Ahab, when he invited him to join with him in going to recover Ramoth Gilead.

4. All things serve God. Even the spirits are made to prosper in his will.

5. A certain man drew a bow at a venture and shot the King of Israel between the joints of the harness. 1 Kings xxi. 34.

6. The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit with all. 1 Cor. xii. 9.

7. The Holy Spirit is not a mere influence or emanation of God, but acts by his own will, and is therefore a person.

THE ORPHAN.

Little Joseph had been alone a long long while he had broken his china dogs, pulled the fringe of wool from the table cover, admired the variegated birds worked on the footstool, until he turned it over, had crawled to the patch of sunlight; resting on the roses on the carpet, and clutched to the golden rings, and played with his transparent fingers.

Josey was cold, hungry and frightened—he had never been alone before; and the first formed word his little tongue had ever uttered, moaningly passed his pouting lips—"mamma, mamma."

No, Josey knew not this. He cried still piteously, until strangers came with kind words and sad faces, and carried him down stairs. As he passed her door he, instinctively murmured the new word, "mamma," until they hushed him.

He was always a shy, quiet boy, and grew still more so among his childish throng. He sought out dark corners, and glided into them unperceived. He talked to himself, when alone, and shared no joys or sorrows. He was unlike other children; they had mothers, he would watch the mother as she impulsively caught to her heart some little prattle, and turn away sadly—no one kissed him. No one looked with pity on his neck with care.

No, he was "one set apart." He must take what comes and be thankful. Poor little Josey! Even the teachers knew he had no mother, and neglected him, or remembered him in long tasks, so hopelessly hard that none but a mother could have made easy.

"Why does Josey cry?" said a little child to her mamma.

"The poor boy has no mother," returned the parent.

"Yes," cried the child, with eager voice and manner, "yes, Josey has a mamma, she is an angel in heaven."
