

by setting a standard.

At present the only McGill Professors concerned are the examiners and their papers are printed without another member of the staff seeing them except for the two representatives on the Revising Board. The scheme therefore does not use our resources fully.

Every one of the British Examining Boards is a university one, and the papers, of which I have copies in my office, show the very high standards which they maintain.