

It is a noticeable fact that for a week or so after the numerous "feeds" given to the boys by the kind friends of the School, when they have sweetmeats, nuts, etc., etc., ad lib., we have always a greater number on the sick list.

Our genial Superintendent, Mr. McKinnon, is becoming quite an adept both in diagnosis and treatment, and with the aid of the telephone we can do the work much more promptly and with greater ease than formerly.

I would like here to acknowledge, and also thank the officers for their kind interest and care for the lads under their respective charge, at all times, and more especially when ill.

In a previous report I suggested the necessity of a more perfect system of isolating cases of contagious disease. I would again further emphasize the want of such space.

Respectfully submitted,

Yours very truly,

J. M. COTTON
