POOR DOCUMENT

A GIRL'S MISTAKE

By MRS. G. BIGG-WITHER.

Carmen instantly threw herself into one with a sigh of satisfaction, and gladly accepted the tea that Geoffry handed her, while the colonel and Marcia seemed to have plenty to say to each other.

* * * * * * *

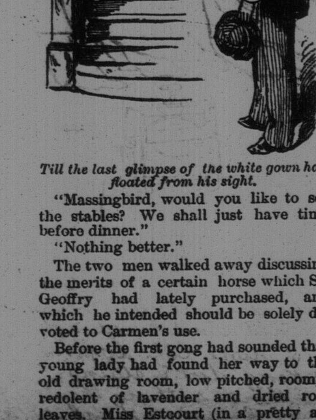
"How lovely it looks out there, Sir Geoffry," said Carmen, pointing to the distant view, which the open doorway framed like an exquisite picture. A fountain was throwing up cool jets of water, that tossed and sparkled in the sunlight; round its old marble basin were soft green ferns and delicate mosses delightfully refreshing to the eye, while behind and beyond rose the sloping uplands, crowned with yellow cornfields, now ripe for the harvest; indeed, it had already commenced. The cloudless blue of the brilliant August day contrasted with the various tints of the just changing trees, to their rich autumn shades, except the oaks whose midsummer shoots still kept green and fresh. And over everything was that wonderful haze only seen in early autumn.

"It does seem so restful, after our hot, dusty journey in those stuffy carriages, to drink one's tea in this cool, old place. I feel I have a right to be lazy."

He looked down with fond approval at the graceful, careless young form; and it was with regret that he heard his sister presently say, as she came from the other end of the hall:

"If you are ready, Carmen, my dear, I will take you to your rooms, where you can refresh yourself at your leisure. We have yet three-quarters of an hour to dinner time. Herbert, I shall leave you in Geoffry's hand."

"I will take care of him, Marcia," said her brother, watching Carmen link her arm in that of his sister as she went up the broad old staircase at the far end of the hall, watched till the last glimpse of the white gown had floated from his sight.



Till the last glimpse of the white gown had floated from his sight.

"Massingbird, would you like to see the stables? We shall just have time before dinner."

"Nothing better."

The two men walked away discussing the merits of a certain horse which Sir Geoffry had lately purchased, and which he intended should be solely devoted to Carmen's use.

Before the first gong had sounded that young lady had found her way to the old drawing room, low pitched, roomy, redolent of lavender and dried rose leaves. Miss Estcourt (in a pretty arrangement of gray silk and old lace) sat at the far end, near an open window, and watched the tall, graceful figure in its soft, clinging primrose silk draperies. She thought she had never seen a more lovely picture in the dear old room, sacred to so many women of the house of Estcourt, than the one now advancing to meet her.

"Ah, Carmen, you remind me so of your mother. You have her very way of walking. The only difference I can find is that you are fairer and taller."

"I remember her too, although I was such a small child, and how she loved me; my pretty mother! 'Her Carmencita,' she always called me! Ah, well! I wish she were here now."

Marcia kissed her affectionately. "Dear," said she, "you know you are your father's heart's delight."

"Yes, dear Miss Estcourt. We are everything to each other. He is so good, so indulgent."

"Carmen, here come the gentlemen," as Sir Geoffry and the colonel were seen making their way through the long gallery like drawing-room.

"We are late, Marcia!"

"No, dear. The gong has not sounded yet."

"There it is!" And the dinner was announced.

What a happy quartet they made, these four. To Marcia, the love of her youth was always a hero. To Carmen, Geoffry was a very Bayard of chivalry, tender, loyal, true. Whether it was the fifteen or sixteen years between their ages, or what not, certainly Carmen idolized him.

In these days she entirely forgot she had ever been through a ceremony of marriage with another man. It was so utterly a thing of the past, she determined to forget it, and really she was succeeding admirably.

"I hope you ladies will bring us our luncheon to-morrow."

"Most certainly we will."

"Where do you begin, Geoff?" asked the colonel.

"In the Ladymead, by the stream."

"How many guns?"

"Six in all. Young Gay is one. He will stay here for a few days. He comes to-morrow from Beauclere. You must have met Julius Gay often in town, Miss Massingbird!"

"Indeed, yes. I know two things about him: he is fond of quoting poetry and splendid at doing a play. Also, he is most kind hearted."

"Three things to his account, Carmen," said her father.

"True, papa! But women are not always logical or accurate."

"Accuracy is near enough."

"You have apparently forgotten, Geoffry, that Clara Gay accompanies her brother," put in Miss Estcourt.

"Upon my soul I did," answered Sir Geoffry, with a gay laugh.

But the very expressive smile in his blue eyes, as they rested on the primrose figure, explained the cause of his oblivion. Blessed are the absent!

Miss Clara Gay would hardly have forgiven this loss of memory. As it was, Miss Gay considered it unpardonable that at the age of 35 Sir Geoffry Estcourt should still be an unappropriated blessing. And as she was endowed with the usual amount of good looks, she intended to execute a good deal of business anent this particular visit.

When Carmen retired to rest that night her dreams were of Geoffry Estcourt; but they were ever marred by the all pervading presence of Allen Fitzclare. However, "dreams are but interludes which fancy makes," and as the morning rose, fair and bright, her dream vanished with the sun. And with the sunshine came Julius Gay and his sister Clara.

Miss Gay looked fresh and fair and rosy with her rapid drive. She was a pretty, typical English girl; light brown hair, good complexion, pretty blue eyes and a charming little figure, and most perfectly conscious of every good point. She had brought with her several killing gowns from Paris, and it must be confessed a pang of disappointment shot through her heart as she saw the beautiful presence of Carmen Massingbird standing in the wide hall doorway with the morning sun streaming down upon her. She seemed to be the very center of the little group. Julius Gay, without thought of his sister, jumped off the dog cart and rushed up the steps.

"Good morning, Miss Massingbird; this is an unexpected pleasure.

"Where is any author in the world Teaches such beauty as a woman's eye?"

"My beauty, though but mean, Needs not the painted flourish of your praise," answered Carmen with a bright laugh. "Mr. Gay, I absolutely forbid your quotations; you really must be suppressed."

Sir Geoffry had gone to assist Miss Gay to alight. "You have brought us charming weather for the 'first,' Miss Gay."

"Yes, it is delicious. Have you a large party? How many guns?" asked the young lady, hardly giving her host time to reply.

"Six with your brother. Col. Massingbird, Harry Vere, Squire Huntley, Mr. Fairfax, of the Grange, and your humble servant." And with that he turned to her brother. "Come, Julius, I cannot allow even Miss Massingbird to keep you. Go in, man, and get some breakfast. We are only waiting for you to start."

"All right, I won't be a second." And he and Sir Geoffry passed swiftly through the hall where the other men were congregated.

"Look sharp, Gay," they called out. The young man nodded gayly, and hastily drinking a cup of coffee and breaking off a piece of roll, pronounced himself ready.

"Have something more substantial, Julius," said his host, pointing to the well spread table.

"No, thanks, Estcourt. I'll make up at lunch time."

"Come along, then." Then they all started off.

But in spite of Sir Geoffry being fully engaged, he managed (not unobserved by the sharp eyes of Miss Gay) to throw a farewell glance at Carmen, as he called out in hearty tones: "Do not forget the luncheon, ladies."

"We will not forget," said Carmen brightly, as she waved her handkerchief.

"Come in, my dear," said Miss Estcourt to Clara Gay, "you really must require some refreshments after your long drive, and so early too."

"It was only six miles, Miss Estcourt, and the morning was so delightfully fresh and crisp."

"There is always something deliciously pure and invigorating in the early scent of an autumn morning. In the spring it is the perfume of leaf and blossom; but the autumn is aromatic and pungent. Yes, I prefer the autumn."

"Ah, dear Miss Estcourt, you can speak from the experience of an early riser," said Carmen, still watching the ever retreating figures of sportsmen, beaters and dogs, as they made their way to the plantation and then became lost to sight. "We lose much of nature's beauty in our gay life in town," continued Carmen.

"Well, we enjoy it quite as much," observed Miss Gay practically. "I am sure I would not give up a ball for a sunrise."

"You can have both," said Carmen saucily, "if you only stay a ball out."

V.

Then the ladies, after Miss Gay had some refreshment, adjourned to Miss Estcourt's morning room with its sunny aspect, where their hostess left them for her daily confab with the housekeeper. By and by the two girls wandered out to the gardens and exchanged mutual confidences (limited, bien entendu) as to their various experiences of their London seasons. Carmen did not think it necessary to inform Clara Gay of the unfortunate little ceremony of three years ago, neither did Miss Gay confess the disgust she experienced at finding Col. Massingbird's daughter the favorite guest of their bachelor host. Indeed, Clara Gay's private conviction was that Carmen Massingbird intended to swoop down on Geoffry Estcourt, whom she had intended for her own particular prey.

But Carmen was in sublime ignorance of the unfavorable view taken by Miss Gay. Indeed, she lived in an ideal world, where, like an enchanted princess, the prince of fate was at last coming to claim her. And she let herself glide down the stream of oblivion, and led her beautiful lotus life.

Two or three days passed; the house party was gay and bright. It seemed to Carmen that she had never tasted such pleasure. Everything ran on wheels. The gentle, unselfish hostess, Clara as bright as a butterfly and as pretty, who, if not the first person in the host's estimation, certainly was in that of Squire Huntley, a rather heavy, ponderous individual, but easily pleased, and greatly in love with pretty Miss Gay; and this young lady, being a diplomatist, kept him in reserve until she saw how events were going to arrange themselves.

As for Julius Gay, he asked nothing better than to sun himself in Carmen's smiles; while Sir Geoffry, in his mind's eye, saw the woman he loved, radiant, beautiful, his wife—receiving their friends. Col. Massingbird found a congenial friend in Mr. Fairfax, who had lately come into some property in the neighborhood, and being an old Indian, they plunged into their grievances and theories of Anglo-Indian life and were happy.

They were very delightful days. Perhaps they would never come again to some of them. Quien sabe?

* * * * * * *

"Carmen," whispered Geoffry as they separated on the softly moonlit terrace, "come down to the Lady's Glen to-morrow, after breakfast. I have something I particularly wish to tell you."

With a little access of color, Carmen answered, "I will come."

Tally One for St. Louis.

It isn't often that a St. Louis man scores a point on a Chicago man, but when he does he is entitled to credit for it. The St. Louis man was in the office of the Clifton house talking to the Chicago man.

"Your fox hunt on Washington's birthday," said the St. Louis chap, "was not much of a success."

The Chicagoan said the weather was too cold.

"Fox was dead," the St. Louisan observed.

"Yes, fox was dead; Chicago folks don't like to run after a dead thing of any sort. That's why they never run after St. Louis."

If the Chicagoan hadn't said this he might have escaped.

The St. Louisan smiled. After a few moments spent in silent prayer he said: "The next time you folks want to make a success of anything in the line of a chase on Washington's birthday get a hog and turn it loose on the boulevard and the whole town will chase it to the death."—Chicago Times.

IDEAS FOR DRESS.

New card cases are of ivory overlaid with filigree silver.

Among flower pins the pansy is still easily a first favorite.

An emerald-set frog with diamond eyes is the quaintest of new lace pins.

The oddest of new card receivers is a bronze owl's head slightly flattened.

Anything or everything but the commonplace is allowed by the fashion of to-day.

Dull blue sashes are in high favor in Paris for wear with gowns of nettle green.

A golden racquet and pearl set ball are linked together in some very new cuff buttons.

The newest gauze fans have a row of wonderfully real butterflies all along their top.

Powder and patches begin to be worn by the more daring dames of the great world in Paris.

Paris threatens to bring in with other empire fashions low necked gowns for all times of the day.

Gold color and black threatens to take the place of the green and black so long considered the height of style.

Some new costumes of heavy cloth have velvet run in and out of slits in the stuff for their sole skirt trimming.

New imported petticoats, whether cotton or woolen, have their colors all repeated in the lace that trims them.

Quite the newest diamond ear drops are set hoop fashion in mountings so slight that only the stones are seen.

The coarse and serviceable Russian net will be largely used as drapery both for waists and skirts of silk princess robes.

A gold corkscrew, small enough when folded to hang upon the watch chain, has use as well as novelty to recommend it.

Now that buttons are so pronounced a feature of the dress, an authority suggests that it will save trouble to buy them first and match tints and tones to them.

Though silk underwear has a certain temporary vogue, with really refined women nothing will ever take the place of sheer cambric and the finest of fine linen.

London sends out for the music room tables shaped and colored like a drum and small stands, whose tambourine tops are painted with the "three little maids from school."

Green with tan, turquois with amber, old rose with pale green, lily leaf with biscuit and peach with amethyst are among the combinations of a daring London costumer.

Heavy black satin, embroidered upon one selvage with lotus leaves of gold or copper color, is combined with plain black to make the handsomest of matronly dinner gowns.

Rows of feather stitching, narrow ribbon or braid set above the hem, are the only trimmings now admissible on the frocks of small children. Frills, loops, puffings and so on are happily proscribed.

The new washing surahs that now come in all the delicate fine shades will be largely used for summer frocks, for ties, for draperies, chemisettes, and will be especially valuable for hat and bonnet trimming.

The costume Boulanger must be simply gorgeous. It is of tea rose silk, embroidered all over with red carnations, and the hat that goes along with it has a bunch of carnations and a garland of spinach for trimming.

The new washing silks now much used in place of lingerie at throat and wrists must never be ironed, but if flat, laid under a heavy weight while damp, or if puffed, drawn up over a smooth round stick and left for a few hours.

Colored borders to your handkerchief are decidedly passe; so is the fashion of tucking them in the front of the corsage. The correct thing now is a fine white kerchief with border of embroidery, or else narrow edge of fine Valenciennes lace, and carried as inconspicuously as possible.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

BITS OF SCIENCE.

In France experiments are being made with cork car springs.

The evidence is accumulating that the microbe of malaria, which was described by Laverau, is the cause of intermittent fever.

A Lartigue single rail railway is to be built in the Argentine Republic from Chilicite to the mineral mountains of Famatina.

The structure of the upraised coral islands, so far as yet examined, appears to lend no support to the Darwinian theory of formation.

The artesian well basin of Dakota supplies abundant water under a pressure of 140 pounds to the square inch from wells 1,165 feet deep.

A most important feature of the scientific instruction in the lower grade of schools should be the collection of specimens which should form the subject of object lessons.

More money is said to have been spent by the United States government in the investigation of the diseases which effect swine than of those which affect the human species.

Dr. Chaille, the well known statistician, states that the average life of woman is longer than that of man, and in most parts of the United States woman's expectation of life is greater.

In France it has been shown that frozen milk can be transported with the greatest ease, and that after being kept for days and weeks and then simply thawed out, it retains all the characteristics of fresh milk.

The bulk of the water of the ocean has a very low temperature; it is ice cold at the bottom even under the equator, but on the surface within the tropics there is a relatively thin film of warm water with a temperature of from 70 degs. to 84 degs. Fahrenheit.

What Our Weather Costs Us.

The United States pays $900,000 a year for its weather service, Great Britain $80,000, Germany $56,000, Russia $65,000, Austria $10,000, Switzerland $6,000, France $60,000. And, though no European nation attempts to do as much as we do, or takes general observations more than once a day, the percentage of verification of predictions is rising there, which is hardly the case in this country. Our weather service, with its great cost and thorough organization, ought to be the best in the world.—Detroit Free Press.

An Essay on Anatomy.

It was in a school in one of the lower quarters; he was a simple hoodlum boy, and the teacher had set him to the task of writing an essay on anatomy. He produced and read with great effect this clear effusion:

"The human body is divided into tree parts, the head, the chist and the stummick. The head contains the eyes and brains, if any. The chist contains the lungs and a piece of the liver. The stummick is devoted to the bowels, of which there are five, a, e, i, o, u, and sometimes w and y."—San Francisco Chronicle.

A Cure for Lumbago.

That painful complaint can be quickly cured by the right remedy. Miss Mary Jane Gould, of Stoney Creek, Ont., says: "I was troubled with lumbago, and could not get relief until I used Hagyard's Yellow Oil, one bottle of which cured me entirely."

The less head a man has the more frequently he looses it.

"Ayer's Hair Vigor is a most excellent preparation for the hair. I speak of it from experience. Its use promotes the growth of new hair, and makes it glossy and soft. The Vigor is a sure cure for dandruff."—J. W. Bowen, Editor Enquirer, McArthur, Ohio.

Many a man's work gets a week behind by his having a weak back.

To strengthen the hair, thicken the growth, stop its blanching and falling out, and where it is gray to restore the youthful color, use Hall's Hair Renewer.

A critic thinks the "art of writing poetry is in decay.' If he means that modern poetry is mostly rote we vote aye.

In purchasing medicines, don't try experiments; the first and only consideration should be genuineness. Ayer's Sarsaparilla has stood the test of forty years, and to-day it is in greater demand than ever—a triumphant proof of popular approval.

A scarf-pin shield that will protect its wearer from entanglement with a girl's hair would be a boon to mankind.

A Frightened Mother.

"My little girl, 4 years old, frightened me one night by a croupy cough, but I gave her a dose of Hagyard's Yellow Oil which relieved her at once, and she slept well all night. I have since used it in several cases of croup, frost bites, etc., and find it always reliable. Mrs. Eva Bradley, Virden, Man.

The death of the head of the great distillery at Cognac removes a famous man, but his spirit is still with us.

Ulcerated Stomach.

"For three years I was unable to work, suffering from ulcerated stomach. Medical aid having failed, I was told to try Burdock Blood Bitters, of which 7 bottles made a permanent cure. This was two years ago, and I feel that I have to thank B. B. B. for being alive and well to-day." Mrs. Rose Ann McCloskey, Marmora, Ont.

Spring planting has been postponed for a few hours to let Winter enjoy a slight turn at second childhood.

The Blood is the Life.

And on its purity largely depends the general health. No one is free from danger, and nine-tenths of humanity actually do suffer from one form or other of impure blood. No one remedy has such a wide range of curative power as has Burdock Blood Bitters—that best of all blood purifiers and tonics.

It is a little girl of five who makes the discovery that the shad is a porcupine turned inside out.

The Safe Plan

When suffering from a troublesome cold, a hacking cough, hoarseness, asthma, bronchitis, or other forms of throat or lung troubles, is to use Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam to loosen the phlegm and soothe and heal the inflamed mucous surfaces. It cures where others fail.

Military tactics are commonin the south, but no young man can obtain a higher appellation than captain until he is over 21. It is impossible to make a major out of a minor.

Father had Quinsy.

"We find Burdock Blood Bitter excellent for weakness, and equally so for headache. Father also suffered severely from quinsy, which B. B. B., by its tonic and purifying properties, completely cured."
