ASTONISHING SUPERSTITION EXISTS IN GERMANY

Advocates of the obsolete conditions which obtain in Mecklenburg often contend that the inhabitants of the sister duchies are the happiest people in Germany. That felicity is not their sole characteristic, at least, at Schwerin. The proceedings, indeed, revealed a depth and degradation of superstition which are not a little astonishing in a country which is so often held up as the model of culture and enlightenment.

FRIENDLY NEIGHBOR.

The events on which the charge was based took place at Grevesmuhlen, a town of five hundred inhabitants, to the north of Schwerin, and the whole affair arose, unromantically enough, out of a stomach-ache.

The patient was one Frau Rollehagen, who complained of her trouble to a neighbor, Frau Krakow. The latter, who is not a little of a "wise woman" at Wismar, who could diagnose the illness from the hair at the back of the head, and supplied infallible remedies for all human ailments.

Frau Krakow further offered her friendly services as guest-waitress, and entrusted with a sample of Frau Rollehagen's hair, set off for the neighboring seaport, whence she returned with a black powder, for which she said she had paid ten marks.

Unfortunately, the maid got better, and it was quite natural that when the Rollehagen family was involved in this trouble through one of the daughters being dismissed from service for theft, Krakow was again consulted.

She suggested that dishonesty had been bewitched into the girl, and, commissioned to make another journey to Wismar, this time brought back two black powders, one to be taken internally and the other to be worn round the neck in a linen bag. The daughter, however, charged with theft, and in spite of the charms cut rather a sorry figure in court.

BECAME MORE DARING.

Krakow now declared that the witchcraft must have sealed the girl's mouth, and she must speak to the wise woman, one Frau Traplow, and be exorcised. The proceedings, indeed, revealed a depth and degradation of superstition which are not a little astonishing in a country which is so often held up as the model of culture and enlightenment.

Encouraged by success, Krakow became bolder and more daring. She suggested that the Rollehagen girl cut her finger, and that the mother got a pimple on her nose, and she affected to see fresh signs that the witchcraft were at work, and that she would go to the witch.

So it went on till Rollehagen's son-in-law heard what was being done with the little patrimony which he expected one day to inherit, and he went to the police. Krakow, who had extorted over $250 from her victims, was sentenced to a year's imprisonment.

The wise woman, whose universal panacea was the dried and powdered root of St. John's wort, had not been so successful. She was, however, commended for her services, and had received only a mark a time for her consultations.

Heard that he would go, but he refused. He would go when he pleased. By this time the alarm had spread, and several citizens in the vicinity had come to the police.

At the railway track and Boncourt street the nucleus of the girl's arms became swollen. She was sufficed out again, and with a sudden jerk broke away from Mrs. Dawson, and with a leap jumped a fence and over a wall towards the toboggan slide in Jackson Park. Miss B. Dawson went after her, and it required all her strength to bring her along. She finally got to Mrs. Dawson's residence, where they placed her in the hammock on the veranda, and Dr. Scott was summoned.

THAT "EVIL EYE" STORY

Peterboro Girl Hypnotized by Stranger all Myth.

Doctor Who is Attending the Child Claims Bathing in Cold Stream Brought on Hysteria.

PETERBORO, July 8.—The latest development in the case of the young girl, Etta Kennedy, alleged to have been hypnotized and hypnotic influence used by some mysterious stranger, is that the story is all a myth and the outcome of over-imaginative brains on the part of the persons first to see the child.

Mr. Amys, who is attending the girl, says that it is a case of hysteria. The fact of the matter is that the girl was bathing in the stream together with several other young girls, and the water was very cold and brought on an attack of hysteria, and the stranger probably appeared, attracted by the screams of the other children. The good wives of the community, brought to the spot by the same cause, doubtless comforted the girl, and she was able to recover. She tells the doctor nothing of the strange "evil eye" story.

One of the girl's friends told the following story of the alleged hypnotism: "We were out for a walk on a July time. It was about 2 o'clock, and besides Etta Kennedy, the Cresswell girls and the White girls were there. At a sudden that awful man looked out from behind the bushes. I can see him yet in my sleep."

She went on to tell that the intruder was dressed in rather fine toggery. He wore a dark brown suit of clothes, and a black, stiff felt hat. His features were sharp, and he had black eyes, dark hair, and a black moustache.

"Yes, he seemed to move his hands in front of his eyes, and Etta just stared him straight in the face. We called on her to come, because we were afraid, but she said no heed to us."

The man came forward, and the child was taken from the water. All the time he steadily gazed at her. She struggled hard to get back to the water, but his eyes held her. A couple of her companions ran to the house of Mr. Thomas Daven, Boncourt street.

The man told the girl's friends to get away and leave their friend with him, saying that he understood her case better than they did. He told them to get some "sovereign balm" on the way.

"No," I won't leave her with you. I am going to stay with her."

Mrs. Krakow found the child lying on the bank. She spoke to her, telling her to come with her to her place. She would not move, but stayed sitting wide-eyed and staring at her.

After some difficulty Mrs. Dawson got her to her feet, and, taking her to come along with her. The man persisted in following them, despite the fact that Mrs. Dawson told him several times to go. He walked beside the child, staring her in the face. The girl in return was gazed of him. Her peatedly, he was told to go, but he refused. He would go when he pleased. By this time the alarm had spread, and several citizens in the vicinity had come to the police.

MORE SENSATIONS IN PRINCE PHILLIP'S TRIAL

BERLIN, July 8.—Renewed interest in the trial here of Prince Philip zu Eulenburg, who is charged with perjury in connection with the "round table" scandal, revealed a year ago, has been aroused as a result of the publication of sensational rumors that the prince had been hypnotized by a woman, and that the disclosure was made during the taking of evidence at the trial.

The streets surrounding the court buildings are filled with people and the police have been strongly reinforced. The prince does not permit the public to approach any of the witnesses. It is rumored that the prince had been hypnotized by a woman, and that the disclosure was made during the taking of evidence at the trial.
