

THE HUSBAND.

of handing down to all a legacy of immortal worth! Could the eye of man crave a happier or more inspiring sight than that of man and wife tottering towards the final goal, whose aspirations and purposes in life have been one, who have wept together, smiled together, pulled together, and pushed together, and who have realized from the day of marriage that their becoming one would be of no avail unless their united efforts were employed in a work of high calling? Such lives are the living expressions of God, and will do more towards placing this world on the highway of redemption than all the churches of the land, for the cry is still being heard, "Show us the Father and it sufficeth us."
