There'll be something in heav-en for children to do.

There'll be work for the heart, there'll be work for the mind
And employment for each little hand.
There'll be some-thing to do,
There'll be some-thing to do,
On that bright, blessed shore
Where there's joy evermore
There'll be some-thing for chil-dren to do.

Patty's young existence being full to the brim of labor, this view of heaven never in the least appealed to her, and she rendered the hymn with little sympathy. The main part of the verse was strongly accented by jabs at the unoffending dandellon roots, but when Mrs. Percy Clement spent Monday the chorus came she brought out the broken knife on the milk pan.

see what had grown since they went there a fortnight ago. Patty loved people better than nature, but failing the one she could put up with the other, for she had a sense of beauty and a pagan love of color. There would be pale hued innocence and blue and white violets in the moist places, thought Waitstill, and they would have them in a chins cup on the supper table. No, that would never do, for last time father had knocked them over when he was reaching for the bread and in a silent protest against such foolishness got up from the table and emptied them into the kitchen sink.

"There's a place for everything," he said when he came back, "and the place for flowers is outdoors."

Then in the pine woods there would be, she was sure, Star of Bethlehem, Solomon's Seal, the white spray of ground nuts and bunch berries. Perhaps they could make a bouquet, and Patty would take it across the fields to Mrs. Boynton's door. She need not go in, and thus they would not be disobeying their father's command not to visit that "crazy Boynton woman."

Here Patty came in with a panful of greens, and the sisters sat down in the sunny window to get them ready for the pot.

"T'm calmer," the little rebel allowed. "That's generally the way it turns out with me. I get into a rage, but I can generally sing it off."

"You certainly must have got rid et a good deal of temper this morning by the way your voice sounded."

"I don't know that I ever thought about it in that way." And Waitstill looked out of the window in a brown study, while her hands worked with the dandelion greens. "I've noticed it, but I never supposed the men did it intentionally."

"No. you wouldn't." said Patty, with ne pessimism of a woman of ninety, s she stole an admiring glance at her as she stole an admiring glante are sister. Patty's own face, irregular, piquant, tantalizing, had its peculiar charm, and her brilliant skin and hair so dazzled the masculine beholder that he took note of no small defects. But Her single braid of hair, the Foxwell hair, that in her was bronze and in Patty pale auburn, was wound once around her fine head and made to stand a little as it went across the front. It was a simple, easy, uncon scious fashion of her own, quite differ ent from anything done by other won-en in her time and place, and it just suited her dignity and serenity. It looked like a coronet, but it was the way she carried her head that gave you the fancy, there were such spirit and pride in the poise of it on the long; graceful neck. Her eyes were as clear as mountain pools shaded by rushes, and the strength of the face was softened by the sweetness of the mouth.
