Maidenhood.

When the buds are white and pink,
On the hill the morning green,
In the land of '08, I think, In the years, years that have been With the blue of perfect skies, With the smile upon her lips,
With the wonder in her eyes,
And the world at her feet tips.

Merrying from the dewy morn, Dancing in the sunny beam,
And the thought of the dawn,
With its quick, pulsating beat;
Watching shadowy figures glide
In a new world just won;
With the world at her feet tips.

To the future vaguely reach,
As a mortal glances behind, Listening, while the new hour teaches With great eyes that seek to find The world of the new morning, All the longing of the heart,
In the land where mangled souls For the will grant, unknown part.

A Prophet in Baby-hood.

BY W. J. DAWSON.

THE DEACONS' MEETING.

THE meeting of the deacons of the Mayfield Avenue Union Church was nearly over, and it had not been a pleasant meeting. Nothing had been said that could be called positively offensive to the minister, the Rev.
John Gaunt, but a good deal had been implied. John Gaunt had been minister of the church for nearly seven years. He had come to it on an enthusiastic call when its prestige had somewhat declined, and the force of his personality and preaching genius had raised it within two years to a position of commanding influence. In the fourth year of his ministry the seventh of success was reached. The pews were all let, and many persons applied for seats in vain. In the fifth year a change began to be perceptible.
There was no longer a crowd. In the sixth year, there were many vacant seats, and some of his most substantial supporters had moved into new and distant suburbs. In the seventh year the process of disintegration was manifest. Hence the present meeting, the object of which was the discussion of what Deacon Roberts irresolutely described as "the situation."

In the early years of his ministry Gaunt had been accustomed to describe himself as more free than any minister in New York. He could preach any doctrine he pleased, he was untroubled by any question of finance, and he was conscious of an atmosphere of warm joy among his people. When some of his less successful brethren complained of their difficulties in relation to their people, he smiled with the suave consideration of a superior person.
It seemed to him the easiest thing in the world to manage men, to attach them to one's self, to evoke from them the best feelings and acts. But he "I have never had a day's trouble in my church," he was accustomed to say.

This was true in the broad general sense in which he intended it, but nevertheless it had never represented the real facts of the case. He had always been perfectly aware that he could not have done so, but for the fact of his success in the pulpit. The most contentious church critic is silent in the presence of visible success. But it does not follow that he will be always silent. Churches, like armies, cease to exist when conquest ceases, meeting halls, striking, imploring, and minister. It seemed an impossible thing, yet there had been fugitive moments of late when the thought thrilled him. But there were much sorer frequent moments of pure despair. That he should fail, and fall lower than he had ever fallen before, he would not admit it. He would rather die than admit it.

He would put all his gifts to the test, and he had never done before.
And he had done it. Never had his ordinary struck so full a note as in these last months. His wife, his own most gentle and acute critic, had often told him so. His friend Palmer, the one deacon of the church, who lived an intellectual life, had carried his testimony. Yet here was the result—this long postponed, but inevitable meeting of his deacons to consider the situation.

"It's like this," Deacon Roberts had said, "the time has come when we must cut our clothes according to our cloth. There are things I have to do without, not because I can't afford them, but because I can't afford them."
"We've got to cut down expenses," "Of course we all know that," replied Deacon Hocking. "That's what we're here for. But will Brother Roberts tell us how?"

There was an odd sympathy between Roberts and Hocking. Everyone knew that whatever the one proposed the other would oppose, and that into these disputes no question of principle ever entered.

"I'm not bound to answer," said Roberts.

"Yes, you are," retorted Hocking.
"What's the use of talking about Bore."

economy if you aren't say what you mean by it?

This challenged, Roberts gathered himself up for a set speech. He was a small thin man, narrow shouldered, spectacled, of neat appearance, whose deferential manner concealed a temper of obstinate dogmatism. He had fought his way from poverty to relative opulence, and had learnt soothingly the habit of the habit of preserving silence. He had a peculiarly irritating voice, thin, in tone, penetrating, and at the same time querulous. Hocking was a large man whose bluff manner covered an equal hardness of sentiment. The two were very friendly to private life, but they consistently opposed each other in all public business. John Gaunt had troubled each with a kind of humorous disregard through the early days of his ministry; but lately he had come to regard them with alarm, perceiv-ing in them qualities of opposition of which they had previously given no sign.

"Well," said Roberts, "my meaning is plain. The church is declining.
It's not for me to say why." Whereupon, with the curious inconsistency of the speaker who is mastered by his rhetoric instead of mastering it, he proceeded to discuss the question at large. He gave facts and figures with a deadly fluency.
The minister waited in tortured impatience for any generous or illuminating word. The speech was precisely the sort of speech that would be made at a company meeting after a bad year's trade. As Roberts spoke, in his precise cold fashion, an almost visible wave of despondency settled over the meeting. Gaunt felt as though he was at his own funeral, hearing the will read.

"Such are the facts," Roberts concluded. "We can discuss the remedies better in another meeting when the pastor is not present."

"Oh, don't do that," said Gaunt, "I am quite prepared to hear it, since it concerns me more than anyone else."

"Let us hear what the pastor himself has to say," suggested Hocking.

"I've very little to say," replied Gaunt, "but I'm not sure that I can say it without giving offence. What has impressed me most to-night is that you all seem to accept defeat as if it were irrevocable. I have listened in vain for the note of courage. I say as well let you know at once that I am not of that spirit. I am going on.
It's not a time for economy, but generosity. We generals don't reduce their forces in the face of the enemy."

No doubt we have lost some of our best members. We all know why.
They have migrated to the suburbs.
But there are more people living at the very doors of the church than there were seven years ago when I commenced my ministry. I propose to get those people."

"We don't want them," interrupted an old deacon named Small. "They are not our kind of folk. They wouldn't mix."

"They are people at all events," said Gaunt with a grave smile. "It may be a mistake that the church is situated among them, but since it is, the church ought to exist for them more than for anybody else."

"That's very fine sentiment, no doubt," retorted the old deacon. "But it won't work. This has always been a church of the rich, and if it changes its character there are many of us that won't stay in it."

Gaunt had it on his tongue to say, "The rich support it," but he was restrained by the recollection of his own attitude of mind in previous years. How often had he been pleased to hear the church described as a church of the rich! He had boasted of it, but he had boasted. It had seemed to him a source of legitimate pride that the influence had been exerted over rich men. Of course he had done nothing to discourage the poor from attending his ministrations, but he had not wanted them, or sought them, or indeed thought much about them.
To influence the rich, to attract the men of means, to direct their generosities—was the poor? So he had argued a hundred times. Because he had so argued his tongue was now dried. And yet for a vivid moment he now saw a vision of the poor, the struggling multitude with their pathetic presence of competence, the daily workers crowded in narrow rooms, the heroic silence, the strong uncomplaining lives around him, and he felt the pathos of their lot.

But they wouldn't mix," well-was the sentiment, however, offending it sounded, so far from the truth? And with this question came another which stung him more painfully:

Muscular Pains Cured.
"During the summer of 1903 I was troubled with muscular pains in the instep of my foot," says Mr. S. Pollard, of Toronto, Ont. "At times it was so painful I could hardly walk. Chamberlain's Pain Expectorant was recommended to me, and I tried it and was completely cured by one small bottle. I have since recommended it to many of my friends, all of whom speak highly of it. For sale by Rank's Drug Stores. What's the use of talking about

What is McClure's.

Everyone who has thought of the danger of facing poverty in this old age will be interested in Burton J.
Hendrick's article on "The Supernatural Man" in the Christmas number of McClure's Magazine. Mr. Hendrick tells of the growth of the pension system among corporations and the work of the Carnegie Foundation on behalf of retired college professors.
Dr. Henry Smith Williams contributes a paper dealing with alcohol as a chief cause of crime, insanity and pauperism; Samuel Hopkins Adams shows how Coppenhagen solved the pale milk problem; General Kuroki tells why Japan defeated Russia.
The number contains two Lincoln articles: one the hitherto unpublished account of the eye witness of the assassination of Mr. Lincoln and the other the story of "Our American Cousin," the play he went to see on the night of the tragedy. An attractive feature of the number is a paper by John La Fargus, his series on "One Hundred Masterpieces of Painting," which is handsomely illustrated in colors. There is an unusually interesting list of short stories: "The Mistletoe Bough," by Lucy Pratt; "On the Gulf Road," by Willa Sibert Cather; "Simon the Gentle," by E. F.
Sterns; "The Closing of the Ranks," by Margaret Wilson; "Beast," by Adeline Knapp; and "The Countess of Overland Hall," by L. H. Bickford.

I AM
A MOTHER

How many American women in happily homes today long for this blessing to come into their lives, and to be able to utter these words, but because of some organic derangement this happiness is denied them.

Every woman interested in this subject should know that preparation for healthy maternity is accomplished by the use of

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND

Mrs. Maggie Glimmer, of West Union, S. C., writes to Mrs. Pinkham:
"I was greatly troubled in health from a weakness peculiar to my sex, when Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended to me. It not only restored me to perfect health, but to my delight I am a mother."

Mrs. Josephine Hall, of Hardestown, Ky., writes:
"I was a very great sufferer from female troubles, and my physician failed to help me. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound not only restored me to perfect health, but I am now a proud mother."

FACTS FOR SICK WOMEN.
For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has positively cured thousands of women who had been troubled with displacements, inflammation, indigestion, dizziness or nervous prostration.

Why don't you try it?
Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice.

An Old-fashioned, Home-Made Mixture which Cures Kidney and Liver Troubles.

A prominent local druggist states that since the celebrated prescription of a distinguished specialist has become more or less known it is interfering with the sale of secret medicines, especially the patent or advertised kidney pills. The prescription, which first appeared in a leading health journal, is reproduced here, just exactly as it is originally written—Fluid Extract Cascara..... 5 cc.
Carrion Compound..... 1 cc.
Syrup Sarsaparilla..... 5 cc.
Directions: One teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime.

Any good druggist can dispense this, or, even better, a person can buy the items separately and mix them at home by shaking them well together in a bottle. It is stated that the ingredients being vegetable, are harmless and simple. It has a gentle and natural action, and gradually tones up the eliminative tissues, leaving the kidneys in a perfectly healthy condition.

A merchant well known in public affairs states that this recipe cured his rheumatism. Save the prescription.
