GAGETOWN, JULY 27th, 1897:
E. G. SCOVILL, Agent Pelee Wine Co.,
Dear Sir—My wife has been afflicted with nervous prostration for several years, using every kind of medicine recommended, but obtaining no relief until I procured some of your Pelee Wine, which I am delighted to say, has had the desired effect. It is the greatest tonic of the age, I think too much cannot be said in its praise and no house should be without it. We have recommended it to several suffering from a gripe disease, with like good results.

I am, yours gratefully,
JOHN C. CLOWS.

MONCTON
Woolen Mills,
SPRING 1898!

I have much pleasure in again informing my customers and the public generally that I have made an arrangement with J. A. Humphrey & Son for the handling of their goods for the coming season—most of the St. John River. My stock this season is large and personally selected with a view to your requirements which my dealings with you for the past three years enable me to do and will be sold at prices lower than former years—while the quality has been kept up to the regular standard—goods being made from pure wool; also new and attractive patterns added. I would ask you to see our goods and prices before purchasing and in so doing I feel assured that you will continue to favor me with your esteemed patronage which you have so generously done in the past.

Yours truly,
ALFRED P. SLIPP.

Poetry.

IN MEMORIAM.

Lines composed by Myrtle Burns, of Jemseg, in memory of Gardner Colwell.

Oh how sad and lonely to think of a loved one gone;
No sickness came to take him from his quiet, happy home;
But in the door yard he met his doom—
Death claimed him for her own.
'Twas early in the autumn when the leaves were turning gold,
And nature in her fulness had some store for each to hold,
What befel the school boy is here just simply told.

There are dangers for the many and fortunes for the few,
As we journey on life's flowing stream we'll find this saying true;
We may bless the coming future to us it may bring woe,
It may bring to us sorrow deep and thorough just to the utmost test,
To a test beyond all questions human nature is no test.

We think our own lot is the hardest but some say God knows best.
Best, 'tis hard to think so when we think of the youth now gone—
That he met his death in the door-yard at his father's home
Just as he was leaving to go to the boat;
Some say the horse kicked him; others think not so.

That why or how it happened we may not truly know.
We may say this way or that but then we cannot show.
And now since all is over and on earth he's seen no more,
We'll pray for his soul's happiness on Eden's golden shore,
Among the angel band to stand to sorrow never more.

BACKGROUND.

She sat before an easel, with her head tipped lightly—so,
A paint brush in her fingers idly trailing to and fro.
I stood quite close beside her, with a wildly beating heart,
And praised with reckless ardor her proficiency in art.

How sweet she was, and dainty! How I loved her! I declare
It seemed to me no other girl could be one-half so fair.
As she sat there, leaning forward in the graceful pose of poise,
And deftly put the background in a plaque of yellow roses.

Ah, that was many years ago. Dear girl, I love her still.
I love her smiles and dimples, and admire the wondrous skill
Of her dainty, snowy fingers. I've been watching them to night
More to and fro above the work she's holding to the light.
And, thinking of that other day, I do a bit perchance,
As she deftly puts a background in Jimmie's other "pantaus."

What America Owes to England.

Next to the deepening and enlarging of the patriotic spirit, we place as a decided gain to America, a better understanding with England.

That there did once exist in the United States a feeling of bitter antagonism to England is hardly open to question. That feeling sometimes rose to a point when it threatened to endanger the peaceful relations between the two countries. That it was fostered or even countenanced by the more intelligent citizens of the Republic, we do not believe. And we are sure that in recent years it was not to any appreciable extent reciprocated by the British. There may have been on the part of some, a little prejudice against certain peculiarities in the social life and manners of America, but there was no bitter dislike.

Brother Jonathan has generally received a warm welcome when he has favored Canada or Great Britain with a visit. American authors have been read with avidity by English readers, American orators have been listened to with enthusiasm by English auditors, American statesmen have been regarded with respect and even reverence by English politicians, and American travellers have been received with hospitable kindness by English households. Yet, undoubtedly, there were some people in the States who suffered badly with Anglo-phobia, and many of them did all they could to infect their friends with the same virulent malady. We are happy to think that the late war has almost stamped out that dire disease. Very few of its symptoms have been noticed during the last few months. Indeed it seems to have been expelled and replaced by an epidemic of an entirely opposite character, what we might almost designate Anglo-mania. Expressions of affection have been as fervid as expressions of detestation were once ferocious. And the reason for this change is not far to seek. The time of trial and testing discovered the true friendship of England for America. Though Great Britain remained nominally neutral, it was seen that the feet of her kept other nations from allying themselves with Spain. The voice of the British public had given forth no uncertain sound; it had declared its oneness with its transatlantic kinsmen. And the world knew that John Bull was going to stand by and see fair play for his younger brother. Blood was once more found to be thicker than water.

Fellow feeling between New and Old England was plainly and unmistakably manifested, and, as the poet says: "A fellow-feeling makes us wondrous kind." Soon "God Save the Queen" was rapturously sung in New York and Boston, and American victories were celebrated with rejoicing in London. On both sides the Atlantic the "Stars and Stripes" and the "Union Jack" were folded in loving embraces. One thing, too, America learned in the course of her conflict with Spain: her experience in coping with a third-rate power taught her that it is more to her advantage to have a first-rate power like England for a friend than an enemy. We do not desire to dwell upon this aspect of the question, lest we appear to be unduly boasting; but it has to be taken into account as a factor in contributing towards a more friendly attitude on the part of the United States to Great Britain. Whatever the influences which have worked towards that most blessed end, we rejoice to know that such a state of friendship has been reached. We devoutly pray that the reconciliation may not be a mere transitory one; but that it may be firmly established on a permanent basis of mutual good-will.

These two great nations are so linked together by a like origin, commercial interests, common literature, family ties, inter-communication, and one mother tongue, that it would be worse than suicidal on the part of either to provoke any spirit of hostility in the other. Those who are one in language, law, and liberty should be one in love. There should be an alliance between them for their mutual benefit, and the well-being of mankind generally. We would not call it an Anglo-Saxon Alliance (that term is not comprehensive or definite enough), but an alliance of English speaking peoples. All "Who speak the language Shakespeare spoke!"

The faith and morals hold which Milton held," should stand together as brethren. Great Britain and America could dictate terms to the world. And, representing the highest development of civilization, they might wield an influence which would prove of incalculable good to less enlightened nations. They might preserve peace, promote amity, and present object lessons in wise and humane government. It almost seems as if God had some high destiny for them: providential circumstances all point to so desirable a consummation. May they not refuse to hear the call; may they not shrink from the exalted task! What magnificent opportunities there are before them! Our hearts beat high with hope as we think of the future they may be instrumental in moulding. The Czar's scheme of disarmament might then soon have a practical realization. Predictions of Hebrew prophets and ideals of Christian teachers might then soon find their fulfilment. Then might be brought to pass the word that is written: "They shall beat their swords into plow shares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war anymore." Then might England and the United States attain to the character and obtain the benediction set forth in the words of the world's Redeemer: "Blessed are the peace makers: for they shall be called the children of God." Then might our eyes be gladdened with the vision of the poet—

"I saw earth's war-scarred countenance sweetly glide
Into the angel lineaments of peace;
And the gentlest sorrow dream herself to joy."

Farm Cleaning.

The secret of being able to keep down weeds about the premises is to either have every foot of ground occupied by animals or crops or have it in such condition that the mower may be run over it at any time.

Sickness and often death lie in a well of impure water. A dead mouse or bug will cause the water to taste and smell offensively. This is a good time to see the well is clean. If the water smells there should be no delay in going into a dug well.

To make a profit in the production of wheat at the prices it has brought during the past few years, except during the latter boom, we must produce a maximum crop at a minimum cost. First, we need a good seed bed; second, we need good seed, and third, we must have plant food in the soil to produce a crop.

From many orchards which might have yielded a good crop of winter apples only a medium to short crop of inferior fruit is now expected. Such shortage, compared with a full crop as is now manifest, is due in part to reasons which could not be remedied by spraying, yet in a vast number of orchards the proper and persistent observance of this necessary branch of horticulture would have brought returns more than commensurate with the outlay of energy required.

A Cheerful Giver.

Some one once went to Dumas pere for 50 sous to help bury a friend.
"What was he?" Dumas asked.
"A bailiff, sir," replied the borrower.
Dumas eyes lit with memories. He ran to his desk and returned with a note which he thrust into the man's hand.
"You say it costs fifty sous. Here are a hundred. Bury two of 'em."

Farming in the Maritime Provinces

Differs materially from farming in Ontario and the West. Conditions are different and our markets not the same. A product profitable in those sections would not pay the tillage here, and a suggestion valuable to a westerner, would prove disastrous if followed by our farmers. In subscribing for an agricultural publication it is well to bear this in mind. There's only one paper that treats of farming from a Maritime Province standpoint. It is the
