

BACKING UP A REPUTATION

If it had been simply a question of Profit, the greatly increased cost of goods to-day would have furnished us with a good excuse of giving you inferior merchandize at the old prices. There, however, your confidence would have been betrayed and our reputation of Giving the Best at Lowest Possible Prices would have been imperilled. The goods listed below will, in every case, give you honest dollar for dollar value.

Hawk Destructive to Trees.

BIRDS' UNVARYING DIET OF FISH SOONER OR LATER CAUSES DEATH THROUGH ACCUMULATIONS OF GREASE.

Random bits of curious knowledge often come the way of persons who live in the summer time close by the ocean's edge. One gets to know, for instance, such things as why hawk nests so often are seen in dead trees. It is not that the hawk, in seeking a home site, by choice picks a dead tree. It is the effect, not the cause of the hawk's preference.

Hawks of the kind considered here live exclusively on fish. Fish are oily, and so it follows that after a few thousand have been dissected and eaten in a nest the tree inhabited by a hawk family becomes discouraged and abandons the struggle.

After hawks have used a lofty bough as a dining room for two or three years a tree becomes so greasy that leaves find it impossible to hold on. The oil slowly makes its way to the roots, covering them and making the absorbing of water from the earth out of the question. Deprived of oxygen, having no leaves through which to breathe it in, and of water, because its roots are greased like a Labor day pig, the tree gets discouraged and gives up the fight.

What is a Million?

Most of us can count, but few of us understand the numbers we often talk of. We know that a million is one thousand thousand. Do we know what a thousand is? Certainly it is ten hundred, but then how many is a hundred? The mind cannot picture one hundred men, nor even a hundred dots (no more and no less) arranged anyhow on paper. Still, we know that one hundred is twice fifty.

We can picture two lines of dots, but we cannot say that each of those lines contain exactly fifty dots. Fifty, then, is too big a number for us to grip. We know that fifty is five tens. Can we form an accurate mental picture of ten things?

Quite easily if we think of three and an odd one. But that is not picturing ten. We have taken the number apart and dealt with it three at a time. Three is a number of which we have a real mental grip.

Directly we see three dots on paper, three trees in a field, or three men on a bus, we have the entire number. We can in the same way get an imaginary picture of four, and so recognise our ten as two sets of four and two over.

But it is not everyone who can immediately grip five as a whole unless the five objects are so arranged as to help immediate division into four and one or two and three.

Six is easily recognized as two threes, but put six small objects all of the same kind on a plate, show them for but a fraction of time, and very few people will be able to say how many were there. The majority need time to count up to six, or to get at the whole by taking the number apart.

Seven is probably too big a number for anyone to grasp as a whole. Yet men talk of millions. Strange, isn't it?

Monster Meteors.

An immense meteor fell recently in Russia, causing a tremendous sensation amongst the superstitious Russian peasantry who saw its flaming descent to earth.

After it fell, it remained for a long time red-hot, blazing, and unapproachable. When it cooled somewhat it was found to be about twenty feet square, being probably the largest meteor that has fallen on the earth in historical times.

Or so, at least, says the report, though the Russian meteor will have to be a pretty big one to beat that which fell in Arizona some few years back, and which is judged to weigh at least seventy tons.

Another very large one fell in Lake Michigan, U.S.A., in the late autumn of 1819, causing a flare that was seen forty miles, and shaking several cities. While one that fell at some unknown period on Disco Island, off the coast of Greenland, and which is still there, is reputed to weigh not less than one hundred tons. Of course, it has never been actually weighed.

So far as this country is concerned the largest meteor of which there is any authentic record is that which fell in a field in Perthshire, in December, 1817, and which weighed just over twenty-two pounds.

A specimen preserved in the National History Museum, at South Kensington, London, turns the scale at eight pounds. It fell in a field in Shropshire, on April 20th, 1876.
