Romance in the Automobile Industry

An interesting anecdote, in view An interesting anecdote, in view of what has happened since, of the early days of the automobile industry is told by Roy D. Chapin, now chairman of the Hudson Motor Car Company in Explosion Manual Company in Company pany, in Forbes Magazine (N. Y.):

"One day one of the Olds engineers and I were returning from a visit to the Wilson Body plant," said Chapin. When we were about a mile away the steering spring broke. We worked with the thing for a while without result and then we lifted the little car around in the road and guided it back again by kicking the front wheels, my companion having assured me that in a little shop adjoining the body plant was a very clever mechanician and inventor who could fix us up.

"I was willing to be shown, but will confess that I did not feel much enthusiasm when I saw his shop, which was nothing more than a leanto. We went in and found a slender, blueoveralled man who came out to see what was wrong with our car. As soon as he went to work I saw that he was an expert mechanician, and his interest in what he was doing was

"He bolted a plate on our broken pring and before long he had us

"As we left the shop my companion waved a farewell and called out: "Much obliged to you, Henry."
"To-day that mechanician is the ichest man in the world.

"It was Henry Ford." The following summer Ford came over to the Olds plant to see how things were getting along. He was then experimenting with a heavyp' acton type of car and is was some time later before he built a lighter model. His plant was finally launch-ed in 1903 and the compny was financ-
