THE PANGS OF REMORSE — OR — A COMPLICATED TANGLE.

CHAPTER XVII.

There were three rooms, plainly but more comfortably furnished than his own, and Clarence decided that they would do for the few nights he should require them, feeling sure that Sir Ralph would welcome freedom, though it came presented in the humblest guise.

Besides, he had his plans, and to take his two liberated prisoners in a hackney coach to an hotel would entirely ruin them, besides leaving a sure trace to Melchior.

Having arranged with the woman of the house, he hurried off with a bag, and at an outfitter's purchased two enormous cloaks, one of them having a hood.

He added to his weapons of offense and defense a deadly looking Toledo blade, and, assuring himself that the bag was filled with brandy, paused a while to go over his preparations to discover if he had omitted anything.

It struck him that it would be as well to take another revolver, and he accordingly purchased one, and placed it beside his other in his belt. Then, when all was completed, his anxiety and feverishness grow more intense.

He could not keep from the entrance court, and soon, though he had determined not to risk the success of his plan by entering the room too soon he found himself in the vault, and treading cautiously along the passage, the bag in his hand and the lantern lighting his path in the other.

When he came to the secret door he paused and listened intently.

So carefully had the iron paneling been made and fitted that no sound could leak through, although the thickness was not that of half an inch.

He waited for five minutes, then cautiously touched the spring.

The door opened slowly, and, as he had done before, he went down on his hands and knees and crawled to the screen.

It was a delight to watch the beautiful girl unseen. She was sitting with her eyes bent upon the fire; but her whole attitude, the pose of her head, one of intense expectancy and attention.

Clarence moved the screen aside and at the slight noise she started and sprang forward.

He caught her in his arms.

"I am here," he said, "my darling, and all has gone well."

"Listen," she said, "it is striking—"

"Lover's punctuality," he said, trying to smile with ease, though, in truth, very anxious.

"And now," said she, "show me how you came in."

He locked the door first, then cautioning her to walk on tiptoe, led her by the hand and showed her the secret door.

"And I never guessed it," she said.

"How should you?" he asked, "if you had searched the room, inch by inch, could you have discovered that?" and, closing the door, he showed her how closely the paneling fitted.

"Ah!" she said, with a sigh and a blush. "Love laughs at locksmiths."

"Yes," he said, "but come, we have work before us, my sweet Lily. See here," and he opened the bag and took out the two cloaks. "This cloak is for you, and this for Sir Ralph."

Her eyes lit up at the mention of her father's name and her hand clapped on Clarence's arm.

"You must put them on when you get into the passage, for the air is cold and damp."

"You have no cloak," she said, reproachfully.

"Love keeps me warm," he said, kissing the hand upon his arm.

"And where are we to go when we escape from this dreadful place?"

He hesitated.

"I have arranged," he said, "only let us obtain Sir Ralph, and the rest is easy."

They stood a little while by the fire in silence, both filled with love and anxiety.

Clarence was the first to speak.

"It must be nearing ten," he said; "and now, my darling, I will not ask you to be firm, for your love will make you that when you remember how much depends upon it."

"Trust me," she said, pressing his hand. "Only tell me what you wish me to do."

"First to cease trembling," he said, holding the little hand to his lips.

"I have ceased," she said, with a smile. "I am ready to obey you in everything."

He nodded.

"Now," he said, "we must unlock the door. Give me this shawl," and he caught one of hers up and raised it to his lips. "Desperate measures are necessary, and there must be no hitch in them. When I give the signal by holding up my hand be ready. Stand at the fireplace with your arm resting on the mantelpiece in any easy, unsuspecting manner; directly I have secured the old woman, which I must do without any noise, be prepared to help me or follow at a moment's notice."

With a sparkle of excitement in her eyes Lillian nodded.

"I will do it," she said. "Look! I am quite calm."

He smiled an acknowledgment and took up his position by the side of the door.

Lillian took up hers and presently the dumb, old woman was heard ascending the stairs.

With leisurely pace she neared the

COULD NOT SLEEP NIGHTS

Pains and Headaches Relieved by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Dublin, Ontario. — "I was weak and irregular, with pains and headaches, and could not sleep nights. I learned about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound by reading the letters in the newspapers and tried it because I wanted to get better. I have got good results from it as I feel a lot stronger and am not troubled with such bad headaches as I used to be and am more regular. I am gaining in weight all the time and I tell my friends what kind of medicine I am taking. You may use my letter as a help to others." — Mrs. JAMES RACHO, Box 12, Dublin, Ontario.

Halifax Nurse Recommends
Halifax, N. S. — "I am a maternity nurse, and have recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to many women who were childless, also to women who need a good tonic. I am English and my husband is American, and he told me of Lydia E. Pinkham while in England. I would appreciate a copy or two of your little books on women's ailments. I have one which I keep to lend. I will willingly answer letters from any woman asking about the Vegetable Compound." — Mrs. S. M. COLLEMAN, 24 Unisack St., Halifax, Nova Scotia.

door and shot back the heavy locks. Directly she opened it and entered Clarence slipped behind her and threw over her head the shawl he had borrowed from Lillian. With a gesture of alarm, which she made by throwing up her hand, she pulled a small whistle from her bosom, but her mouth being covered she, of course, could not use it, and fell upon the floor uttering half-smothered cries.

Clarence gently disengaged the whistle from her hands and unwound the shawl.

The old woman raised her eyes, and when she saw who it was standing over her, she threw up her hands and commenced in great fright marking out the words, "Mercy! mercy!" upon her fingers.

Clarence, by the same means, asked her if she knew who he was.

"Yes," she replied, swiftly, "Master Cliff! You won't hurt me?"

"That all depends," said Cliff. "You know that I can get you hanged!"

She rocked herself to and fro in great terror, and with incredible swiftness formed out upon her fingers a thousand excuses and pleas for mercy.

Clarence stopped her, for he knew that time was precious, and beckoning Lillian to his side pointed to her and asked:

"Where is her father?"

For some seconds the old woman preserved an obstinate reticence.

Clarence did not repeat the question, but proceeded to ask the shawl up into a rope and marking out the word upon his finger, "police," pretended that he was going to bind her arms.

Then suddenly she motioned out: "On the third floor."

Clarence explained the answer to Lillian, and she laid her hand upon her heaving bosom.

"Oh, Clarence! can it be true that he is so near? Oh, let us go at once!"

Clarence, as anxious and impatient as she yet restrained her.

"Caution, dearest; this old woman is not alone; there must be some jailers in the house. I will ask her."

He then put the question, but the old woman, fearful that she had committed her terrible master too much already, could not be prevailed upon to reply, and Clarence, carrying her to the heavy chair, tied her securely to it.

"Now," said he to Lillian, "watch her, if by any chance she should get clear of her bonds blow the whistle."

Then with another hard pressure and an encouraging smile he left the room.

Lillian longed to accompany him, but she had promised to obey, and so, with a secret enjoyment of the changed position, she became jailer to the old woman who had so lately been playing that part to her.

Clarence grasped his revolver and stole quietly up the stairs.

All the doors on the second floor were closed, two or three had been screwed up, and as the dust lay so thick upon the stairs a suspicion crossed his mind that the old woman had played him false.

But as he turned the lobby of the third floor he saw a man's boots lying on the ground. He stopped and picked them up, and as he did so his heart gave a great leap, for he saw that they were those of a gentleman, and what gentleman could be in that house of ill omen but Sir Ralph?

Proceeding cautiously and noiselessly, and turning his lantern on only half an inch, he reached the third floor and stood hesitating at the four doors.

The heavy bolts on one decided him, and, first listening to ascertain if his footsteps had been heard, he cautiously drew back the bolts, fitted the lock with a skeleton key, and turning on his lantern to the fullest extent entered the room.

A figure started up from before the fire and confronted him angrily. There was no light but that from the lantern, and necessarily while it streamed upon the room it left the figure of Clarence Clifford in total darkness.

"What fresh villainy or outrage is this?" demanded the figure, and Clarence's heart leaped joyfully as he recognized the stern ones of Sir Ralph, whose face was turned to the light.

"Hush! for Heaven's sake, Sir Ralph!" said Clarence, warningly.

Sir Ralph started at the voice and turned pale.

"You! or is this some farther fiendish trickery?"

MEN'S SAMPLE SHOES—In Black, Brown and Patent, Goodyear welts, Reg. $6.00, now selling for Three fifty. PARKER & MONROE, LTD., East End Branch.—July 23, 1925.

LUX

You cannot buy good woollens, good silks, good satins, good velvets, or in fact any good article unless you pay a good price.

Just as Diamonds cost more than glass heads, so good costs more than brass, so does Lux cost more than ordinary soap flakes.

If you wish to save money, don't buy inferior soap flakes, they will spoil your garments. Cheap inferior soap flakes will ruin your silks and rot your clothing. Always use Lux.

Lux is made and guaranteed by Lever Brothers, Ltd., soap-makers to His Majesty King George. Lux is reliable. Lux is as pure as the most expensive toilet soap.

Wash your baby's clothing with Lux. Use Lux for washing expensive clothes, your silks, velvets, woollens, satins, crepes, etc. Lux is sold only in packages.

When you pay many dollars to get the clothing you like, it is foolish to buy inferior soap flakes which will ruin good clothing.

Lux is so pure you may use it to shampoo your hair, or in your bath.

You can depend on Lux; beware of imitations, take care to get Lux, which costs only 10 cents per package.—July 16, 1925.

A Pig From the Sky

DROPPED BY EAGLE AND RESCUED BY TOURIST.

A Swiss newspaper gives an account of the adventure of an English tourist who, while passing through Tarnina Gorge, near Ragaz, suddenly saw two eagles which swooped down as though to attack him.

Armed only with an umbrella, the tourist prepared to defend himself, but the eagle flew off, letting drop at his feet a live pig a few weeks old.

The Englishman's return to Ragaz with his protesting but uninjured charge under his arm, caused great mirth.
