THREE NEAR DROWNINGS ON THE RIVER SUNDAY

Boys Who Went to Rescue a Couple in Trouble Thrown Into Water—Two Others Reached the Boat.

Three boys named Russell Grover, Nelson Balkwell and Lee Mason had a narrow escape from drowning on the Thames on Sunday afternoon.

Had it not been for the timely help of a boatman, another tragedy of the river might have been enacted.

The boys rented a canoe and were on their way to Springfield. When part way down, they saw a man and a woman in a rowboat in trouble.

They immediately went to their assistance. When near them, one of the boys leaped into the rowboat to help the couple. The impact caused the canoe to dip water, and it rapidly filled. The two lads left in the canoe were thrown into the water, but another boatman, who had also seen the trouble, hurried to them. He picked them up and took them ashore. The other boy rowed the couple, who were first in distress back to the boathouse.

They were all badly frightened, but none suffered any ill effects of their tumble in the river.

Other lads by the name of Edmunds and Richardson were also thrown out of a canoe. One of the boys rocked it, and the craft filled with water. They managed to keep it from sinking until they paddled to shore, a short distance away. Other than receiving a wetting, they were unhurt.

WOMAN WITNESSES IN ENOS CASE

Windsor, July 30.—Cassie Vincent and Louisa Lewis, the colored girls, who claimed they were brought to Windsor on a Canadian Pacific Railway freight train, have been sent back to Chatham. The girls are wanted there as witnesses at the inquest into the killing of Jacob Enos, the night of July 18. It is supposed they boarded the train for Windsor in order to avoid the inquest.

CAUGHT IN CELLAR.

Toronto, July 30.—A man giving the name of J. B. Smith was caught this morning by the police in the basement of Professor Lendon's house on St. George street. The family is away and the object of the intruder was burglary and theft.

PROSECUTE LAUNCHERS.

Toronto, July 30.—The Attorney-General's department has ordered that Reginald Cooper and Frank Logan, who had charge of the gasoline launch from which the "shell" of being struck by the ferryboat John Hamilton, two women were drowned in the bay a month ago, shall be prosecuted on a charge of criminal negligence.

First Installment Brought Forth a Large Amount of Money On Saturday.

Tax Collector Hays was the busiest man on Saturday in these parts. From early morning until late at night a continuous swarm of people were crowding into his office endeavoring to pay their taxes before the end of the month.

The citizens generally met their payments promptly. Major Hays has not yet made out a statement, but from indications the sum received will be quite as good as last year's collection.

"We are quite well satisfied," said the major. "The people have money apparently to meet their obligations and are doing so very well. The strike is not making a great deal of difference, so far as I can see."

The total amount collected on the first installment will reach about $400,000. First installment taxes will be received and the discount allowed on Tuesday.

PUBLICATION OF ROLLS WILL BE MADE PLAIN

People Will Not Be Perplexed as They Were on a Previous Occasion.

The assessment roll will be published. The finance committee came to this decision Friday afternoon, and the council will carry out the recommendation.

This will be the first time the roll has been published in many years.

The last time this was done, there was considerable dissatisfaction expressed at the results, as the publication did not add anything to the knowledge of the average ratepayer, being very confusing.

However, it is the intention of Ald. Richter, chairman of the finance committee, that the publication will convey the fullest possible information to the citizens generally.

Of course, it will cover only really assessments, and will have no reference whatever to business or income assessments.

The street number and owner of property will be given by streets, and a comparison of values can easily be made by this method.

City Clerk Baker and Assessment Commissioner Grant are at work on the roll now, and it will be ready for the printer at a very early date.

LONDON'S SANATORIUM WILL OPEN THIS WEEK

The Institution for Treatment of Consumption Is Almost Ready Now.

The London Health Association Sanatorium at Byron will be ready to receive patients before the end of the week.

At a meeting of the board of directors Saturday it was announced that the sanatorium would be ready this week. The exact date of the opening was not set, as it depends largely on the work of the contractors, but it is certain that by Saturday next several patients will be undergoing treatment at the institution.

A number of applications from London, Elgin County and St. Thomas have been received, and when the sanatorium is opened they will be taken in.

The English papers received Saturday give an account of the important evidence taken before the coroner on July 21.

The first witness was Mr. John Edward Nash, who first gave information to the police. He described himself as a theatrical manager, of 29, Park Mansions, Vauxhall Park. He proceeded to state that his wife and himself were great friends of Belle Elmore (Mrs. Crippen), as well as of Dr. Crippen. On Feb. 7 he heard that Belle Elmore had resigned from the Music Hall Ladies' Guild and had left for California. On Feb. 27 there was a dinner given by the Benevolent Institution, presided over by Mr. Joseph Elvin. The witness and his wife were very surprised to see Crippen enter the room with his lady typist, Mrs. Paul Martinetti, who was sitting next to him, recognized a brooch which the woman was wearing as having belonged to Mrs. Crippen. The witness continued: That made a great impression on me. On the 23rd March my wife and I sailed for New York on business. During the first week in May we received a letter from Mrs. Martinetti telling us that poor Belle had died. About the middle of May we met Mrs. Fred Ginnett in New York. She is the president of the Music Hall Ladies' Guild, and she was very upset about Belle Elmore dying, and wrote to the authorities at Los Angeles. The police replied that no such woman had died in Los Angeles. Being great friends of Belle Elmore we both felt very bad over the matter, and felt it was a most mysterious affair.

An Interview With Crippen.

On June 23 the witness went on, I visited, in company with my wife, Dr. Crippen at his office in London. That is the first time we had seen him since the reported death of Belle Elmore. We went to offer condolence, and he seemed to be very much cut up. In fact, he sobbed. He seemed to be very nervous and he was twitching a piece of paper throughout the interview. He gave it out at first that his wife had died at Los Angeles. When I questioned him he said it was not Los Angeles, but some little town near San Francisco. Not knowing that I had lived for two and a half years in San Francisco, he was rather surprised when I questioned him about a number of the districts. I mentioned several small towns, and he said it was some little Spanish town. I then mentioned Alameda, and he said he thought that was the place. I asked him if he was sure of this, and he said, "No," and I said to him, "Peter, do you mean to say that you don't know where your wife has died?" He said he could not remember the place. I then said to him, "If you have received her ashes," and he said, "Yes, I have got them in the safe." I asked him the name of the chemist and about the certificate of death, and he then commenced to get very nervous. At this time I be-

Italy's Dowager Queen in Peril of Murder

Reds Planned to Kill Margherita on Anniversary of Humbert's Slaying.

Milan, July 31.—An anarchist plot to murder the Dowager Queen Margherita has been discovered on the tenth anniversary of the assassination of her husband, King Humbert, who was slain at Monza on July 29, 1900. The man who was chosen to execute the decision of the revolutionary group gave himself up to the police, and, after confessing his part in the plot, committed suicide in prison.

For several days the police have noted signs of activity among the radical element, and several arrests have been made. The various groups constituting the anarchist party in this city held frequent meetings, and at one of these it was decided to assassinate the dowager queen on the anniversary of her husband's death. A man was chosen by lot to carry out the decision, but his courage failed him, and he revealed the entire plot to the secret police.

The Chapelle Exploitore, erected by order of Queen Margherita on the very spot where the late king was murdered, was inaugurated yesterday at Monza with appropriate ceremonies. All the civil and military authorities were present. The principal speech was made by Signor Fabri, a member of the chamber of deputies. The chapel is a triumph of the art of architecture.

The dysenteric—that mysterious tradesman—was at the time of the great London fire a dealer in salted or dry meats, pickles, sauces, etc., but he no longer dysenteric, but sells instead drugs, dyestuffs, colors and chemicals and even buttons.

CRIPPEN AND WOMAN

nose, and from them his eyes looked out dully. His face was pale and drawn.

Doctor Handcuffed.

The whistle sounded hoarsely, a signal to the waiting Eureka that Dew's search was at an end. Immediately the pilot boat came alongside, and the newspapermen and photographers swarmed aboard. Crippen they found handcuffed in his stateroom, and Miss Leneve under the care of a physician in her room.

The news by this time had spread among the passengers, who had been duped throughout the voyage by the bogus clergyman and his effeminate son. Captain Kendall had kept from them the identity of the two mysterious passengers, and although the recent bombardment of wireless messages had aroused their suspicions, none on board besides Llewellyn Jones, the wireless operator, knew that the two were Dr. Crippen and his girl companion.

The Crippens' Maid.

London, July 31.—The Crippens' French maid, Mile. Lecocq, is now at Boulogne, whence she was sent by the detectives after she had told them all she knew about Crippen and Miss Leneve.

She entered Dr. Crippen's service on the 11th of June. Miss Leneve she took to be the doctor's wife, and she says they appeared to be very fond of one another. Crippen was always perfectly self-possessed, and when she went into the cellar to chop wood or fetch coal she found nothing to suggest that the flooring had been removed in any part.

"One day," she says, "Dr. Crippen came to help me chop wood. All the time he joked. On Saturday, July 9, two detectives presented themselves. When they left I saw that madame was trembling. Next morning I saw that she had been crying a great deal. Madame went out a little later, as was her wont. Later on I received a letter from madame saying that I was not to be uneasy, adding: 'We are going to the theatre, and shall not be back until late.' The next day my master and mistress did not return, and on the day following a lady whom I did not know, except that she was the wife of the person whom Dr. Crippen invited occasionally to dinner, came to the house. She was accompanied by her husband. My girl said, 'You must go away. Your master is not coming back.' She made madame's dresses into a parcel, which she took away with her, and her husband paid me what was due to me for wages."

Was Mrs. Crippen Poisoned?

London, July 31.—The inquest on the death of Mrs. Crippen has been adjourned until Aug. 15. The coroner, Dr. Denford Thomas, explained that the adjournment was necessary for the reason that an analysis was being made of the remains to see if any poison had been administered.

How Suspicion Was Aroused.

The English papers received Saturday give an account of the important evidence taken before the coroner on July 21.

The first witness was Mr. John Edward Nash, who first gave information to the police. He described himself as a theatrical manager, of 29, Park Mansions, Vauxhall Park. He proceeded to state that his wife and himself were great friends of Belle Elmore (Mrs. Crippen), as well as of Dr. Crippen. The witness continued: That made a great impression on me. On the 23rd March my wife and I sailed for New York on business. During the first week in May we received a letter from Mrs. Martinetti telling us that poor Belle had died. About the middle of May we met Mrs. Fred Ginnett in New York. She is the president of the Music Hall Ladies' Guild, and she was very upset about Belle Elmore dying, and wrote to the authorities at Los Angeles. The police replied that no such woman had died in Los Angeles. Being great friends of Belle Elmore we both felt very bad over the matter, and felt it was a most mysterious affair.

An Interview With Crippen.

On June 23 the witness went on, I visited, in company with my wife, Dr. Crippen at his office in London. That is the first time we had seen him since the reported death of Belle Elmore. We went to offer condolence, and he seemed to be very much cut up. In fact, he sobbed. He seemed to be very nervous and he was twitching a piece of paper throughout the interview. He gave it out at first that his wife had died at Los Angeles. When I questioned him he said it was not Los Angeles, but some little town near San Francisco. Not knowing that I had lived for two and a half years in San Francisco, he was rather surprised when I questioned him about a number of the districts. I mentioned several small towns, and he said it was some little Spanish town. I then mentioned Alameda, and he said he thought that was the place. I asked him if he was sure of this, and he said, "No," and I said to him, "Peter, do you mean to say that you don't know where your wife has died?" He said he could not remember the place. I then said to him, "If you have received her ashes," and he said, "Yes, I have got them in the safe." I asked him the name of the chemist and about the certificate of death, and he then commenced to get very nervous. At this time I began to feel that there was something wrong. When a man cannot tell where his wife died, and from where he has received the ashes of her remains, I made up my mind that there is something wrong. I made an appointment to see Superintendent Frost and Inspector Dew on June 30.

In answer to the coroner, the witness said: I came over here and I found that no one had had the courage to back to take up this matter. I, therefore, felt it my duty to take action myself.

Crippen's Story to the Police.

Inspector Walter Dew was the next witness. He said that after seeing Mr. Nash on June 30 he made inquiries in London and elsewhere, was not satisfied, and determined to interview Crippen. Early on the morning of July 8 he called at 39 Hilldrop Crescent with Sergeant Mitchell. He saw a French girl, who said she was the servant, and Miss Leneve, whom he recognized as Crippen's typist. She said she was Mrs. Crippen's housekeeper, and that Mr. Crippen was out. The witness went on: I proceeded with her and Sergeant Mitchell to Albion House, New Oxford street. On the third floor Crippen was carrying on some sort of dentistry business. He at once saw me, and I told him who I was. I said that certain information had reached me as to the stories circulated by him concerning his wife's death, and that I had come to him because I was not satisfied with the inquiries I had made. He said he was quite willing to give me any explanation, and added, "I suppose I had better tell the truth." He then made a long statement to me, which I reduced to writing, and which I do not propose to put in at present. In the statement was contained a remark to the effect that what he had said about his wife's death was all lies. So far as he knew she was not dead; but on Feb. 1 he gave a little party to some friends, including Mr. Paul Martinetti, and during the evening an incident occurred in which she abused him (Crippen), and said she had had quite enough of it and was determined to leave him and go away. He said she had told him that he would never see her again, and that she knew someone who wanted her, who was willing to keep her and find her with all she required. He said she had repeatedly made that statement, and he had taken no notice of it, and in the present case he did not attach any importance to it. As far as he knew the man to whom she referred was Mr. Bruce Miller, who he thought lived in Chicago, and he thought she had gone to him. I questioned him about his wife's jewelry, and he said she had taken some with her and had left some behind. She had often said she did not want anything he had bought, but might have taken a basket with her. I then saw Miss Leneve, whose statement I do not propose to give today. I told Crippen I was not satisfied. I asked him whether he would mind coming up to the house at Hilldrop Crescent with him, and he said he would be very glad that I should do so.

Searching the House.

We proceeded to 39 Hilldrop Crescent, continued the witness, and before I went into the house I just walked round the garden, but there was nothing to indicate that there was anything wrong. We searched the house, and everything seemed to be in perfect order, except that in one of two of the rooms carpets were rolled up and some boxes had been packed. It is a very well-known fact that Crippen meant to go away within a few months. I then saw Sergeant Mitchell between the rafters of the house to look for anything suspicious, but he found no papers or any indication of any disturbance. Of course I reported the matter to my superior officer and continued the inquiry. On the following Monday I called at Albion House, and discovered that Crippen and Miss Leneve had disappeared on the Saturday afternoon, leaving a letter for a man named Long.

The coroner (reading the letter): This is a letter from Crippen suggesting to someone to wind up his affairs.

The witness: That is so; that he had got to go away. The same afternoon I went to Hilldrop Crescent again, and there I found a French girl, who had only been employed there about a month, and who could give me but little information. She did, however, say that on the Saturday Crippen left the house in the usual manner in the morning, taking nothing with him out of the ordinary, and that Miss Leneve also left about an hour afterwards, also taking nothing with her, with the exception of a small reticule bag. The girl was taken charge of by the police authorities, and was sent back to France the next day.

The Discovery of a Body.

On that day there was nothing to indicate anything wrong, but in a wardrobe of the bedroom occupied by Crippen and Miss Leneve the witness found a fully loaded five-chambered revolver. Inspector Dew continued: I visited the premises on the Tuesday and Wednesday, and on Wednesday, when we were examining the cellar in the passage, leading to the floor, we had our suspicions aroused, and we decided to make a most minute examination of the floor of the cellar. Gropping about, we found that some of the bricks were looser than others, and we took some of the bricks up with a spade and other instruments. Then we dug into the ground, and after a short time came upon what I thought to be a piece of human flesh. I at once sent for the divisional surgeon, Dr. Marshall, and then procured other officers and caused the whole of the floor to be dug right up, and a large quantity of human flesh was discovered.

The Head Missing.

The coroner: Did you find the head?

The witness: No, we found no head, but amongst the things we did find, particularly indicative of the theft, was a smaller portion of a man's hair amongst the fragments of a man's handkerchief, two corners of which had been tied in the reefers fashion. We found no portion of the head at all, and no bones whatever. It seemed as if someone had carved the flesh to pieces. There was a quantity of lime associated with the mold and flooring. The conclusion I draw from this is that whoever committed the crime had the idea of destroying the whole of the identity of the person murdered. The bones could very quickly be got rid of.

The witness said that they found two pieces of string, and the clothing amongst the remains included a portion of a man's shirt or pyjama jacket. On the tab of this jacket was the name "Jones Brothers, Holloway Road." Subsequently he discovered a suit of pyjamas in a box upstairs similar to the jacket which was found amongst the remains, and also a pair of pyjama trousers, which had been very much worn. He could not find any jacket to go with those trousers, so it was thought that the missing jacket might be the one which was found with the body. The string and the handkerchief might have been used for the purpose of strangulation, or they might have been used for the purpose of dragging a portion of the body along.

A Doctor's Testimony.

At this point the witness said he thought that the interests of justice would best be served by an adjournment being granted by the coroner.

The coroner, however, declined to call Dr. Marshall, the divisional police surgeon, who said that he only believed the remains were those of a female by what he had heard. The man had evidently endeavored to remove every evidence of sex.

The coroner: Do you believe, in view of all the circumstances of the case, that it is one of homicide? Yes.

The coroner: Well, of course, the girl could not put herself in such a position.

Mr. Paul Martinetti, describing himself as a retired professional, of King Edwards' Mansions, Shaftesbury avenue, said he had known Dr. and Mrs. Crippen for about a year. They appeared to be on good terms. On a date which he could not give exactly Crippen called at the witness's flat and told him his wife had gone to America on very important business, that she might be away for six months, and that it might lead to a title. He said he was going to sell his furniture, and might leave the house. Next day Crippen said something about his wife having double pneumonia. He subsequently saw Crippen at the Music Hall Benevolent Fund Ball with the lady typist. Crippen looked very glum.

A Change of Clothes.

William Long, a dental mechanic, said he first met Crippen in 1896 or 1897. On Saturday, the 9th July, at Albion House, Crippen gave the witness a list of goods he required, which included a suit, a hat, some collars and ties, and various other things. The witness went for the clothing to Baker's, and placed it in Crippen's room upstairs. On the following Monday he found a suit of clothes in the foreman's cupboard. The last time he saw Crippen was at 1 o'clock on Saturday, July 9. The same evening he received a letter from Crippen, who said: "Will you do me the very great favor of winding up as best you can my household affairs?"

Who Gets the Reward?

Father Point, Que., July 31.—The bitter warfare that has raged between Chief Constable Charles Gauvreau, of the Dominion police, and Chief McCarthy, of the Quebec provincial police, Saturday, culminated in a threat from Gauvreau that he would charter a tug and intercept the steamer Montrose below Father Point to arrest Dr. Crippen and Ethel Clare Leneve.

This followed a second rejection of Gauvreau's claims by Inspector Dew of Scotland Yard, who since his arrival on the Laurentic, has given his support to McCarthy.

"I have been delegated by the authorities at Montreal to make the arrest," said Gauvreau. I was first on the field, and I am the representative of the Dominion police in the Rimouski district. I am going to uphold my dignity if I have to outflank those who dispute my power."

The reward involved is $1,250.

TRAILED THE WIFE TO CATCH HUSBAND

New York Detectives Capture Man Who Made Big Bond Steal.

New York, July 31.—A frail little man with gray cheeks and hollow eyes, in whose presence there was nothing to suggest that singlehanded he had lifted $500,000 in bonds and stocks from a strong box of a bank, was arrested this afternoon
