THE CASTLE SHAWL.

BY L. L. T.

"The sure I don't know what to do," said Sara Ellington.

She had been sitting at the window for some time, staring steadily at the falling drops of the April shower.

"About what?" said Miss Carleton, who, as a teacher in the same school, was also waiting for the shower to subside a little before she dared to venture forth into the streets. The little ones were gone, the desks and benches all deserted, the slates and desks piled away, and the janitor evidently in a hurry to have the place to himself.

"Mrs. Copley has invited me to go to the Academy of Design with her, and I have nothing to wear but this old Scotch plaid shawl that's moth eaten and darned, and faded and everything else that it ought not to be," sighed Sara.

"Oh, yes, I remember," said Miss Carleton, with a knowing smile. "The Gerald Leigh's sister—the one that lives in the brown house on Madison avenue. Sadie, I'm very much afraid you'll have to stay at home."

"But I don't want to stay at home," pouted Sara. "I have so few chances to go out anywhere."

"Least of all with Mr. Leigh's aristocratic sister," said Miss Carleton, laughing. "But I'll tell you what you can do, Sadie—hire a shawl."

"Hire one?"

"Why, of course. I know plenty of ladies that do it. Go to Mademoiselle Felicie's on Upper Broadway; she'll charge you ten dollars for one afternoon's wear of an Indian shawl; but it's better than paying five hundred for it, and out."

"I never heard of such a thing," said Sara.

"Well, you see, you haven't heard all the world," said Miss Carleton, with an air of superiority. "It's often done. I hired a lace shawl myself the day I went to the picnic and a pretty taking I was in for fear I should tear it. But came's hair is a different thing you see. You've such pretty sloping shoulders you would look perfectly charming in one of those lovely sandal-wood-scented things."

"But—would it be so bad as being a falsehood?"

"Oh,shaw!" cried Miss Carleton. "Asking a falsehood, indeed! Is it any worse than hiring a carriage when you can't afford to keep one of your own?"

"I don't know," hesitated Sara.

And then she thought how rich the camels-hair shawl would look, and remembered that Gerald Leigh would probably be said of the party.

"Will you go with me?" said she, turning suddenly to Miss Carleton.

"To Mademoiselle Felicie's."

"I don't care. It has stopped raining, and I may as well go there as anywhere."

Mademoiselle Felicie was a smooth-tongued, voluble Frenchwoman, who could talk a customer into any mood she pleased; and when Sara Ellington went away she carried in a complete parcel under her arm, the India shawl, whose deep, rich colors and artistic arrangement of patterns had captivated her fancy.

"It makes me feel just like the 'dew in borrowed plumage' of my childhood's fables," said she to herself; "but it's only for one afternoon, and I do so hate to have Gerald think me shabby."

Mrs. Ellington shook her head and looked very grave when Sara unfolded her shawl and claimed her mother's admiration for it.

"My dear," she said, "it is very beautiful, but—it is not yours."

"Mamma!"

"It reminds me of the old story of the china pot and iron pot swimming down a stream together, and do you remember what because of the china pot?"

"I don't see that that has anything to do with me, mamma."

"Don't you, my dear? Well, you are old enough, and ought to be wise enough, to decide these things for yourself," said Mrs. Ellington, gravely.

"But if you would take my advice, Sadie, you would send this grey shawl back, and either remain at home or wear your own wrap."

"But Sarah did not take her mother's unpalatable advice."

"How else you look, dear," said Mrs. Copley, as she pretty little chocolate-colored coupe stopped in front of the unpretending red brick house whose second story was rented by Mrs. Ellington and her mother. "And what a love of an India shawl! An heirloom, eh?"

Sara smiled and muttered some indistinct answer, as she stepped into the carriage with her superbly-dressed friend. And as she did so a sudden consciousness came upon her of how little her faded hair accorded with the rich shawl, and how frayed the flounces of her worn black silk dress were.

"Would not the old plaid Scotch shawl have been better, after all? But it was too late now, to weigh these considerations—and Sara derived a sort of pleasure from the soft feeling of the camels' hair folds, as they fell about her.

"Gerald will meet us at the academy," said Mrs. Copley, as they rolled along.

"Gerald had another engagement, but of course he broke it when he heard that you were to be with me."

And Sara smiled and blushed, and looked quite pretty enough to justify Mr. Leigh in his infatuation.

It was a brilliant spring afternoon, and the academy of design was crowded with the fashionable world of New York. Gerald Leigh met his sister and her friend on the threshold of the water-color room, and as once gave Sarah his arm.

"I could not resist the opportunity of meeting you," said he, and Sara's heart gave a happy, tumultuous throbbing as he spoke.

How glad she was now that she had hired the Indian shawl! How shabby she would have felt in the old Scotch plaid with its darned places and the faded spot in the middle.

As she stood in front of a beautiful figure-piece, still leaning on Mr. Leigh's arm, a soft tap came on her other shoulder, and turning with a start she saw a man in police uniform.

"You must come with me," said he. "Quiet now," as Gerald Leigh made an indignant step forward. "Least said is soonest mended, and there ain't no use in making a fuss," demanded Leigh, still holding tight on Sara's arm.

"That there shawl's stolen," said the man. "Mrs. Richfield on Fifth avenue lost it three weeks ago. She's here to-day and recognized it at once. She's a-waitin' outside in her carriage, and we'd best go to the police station at once."

"I don't know Mrs. Richfield," gasped Sadie. "I never heard of her. I got this shawl from Mademoiselle Felicie on Upper Broadway. Oh, Mr. Leigh," with a conscious sob, "don't let them take me away."

Gerald Leigh considered a moment.

"It is as the man says," said he. "We had best go with him. But, of course, I will bail you out at once. There is evidently some glaring misapprehension here."

For Sara Ellington nearly fainted with mortification as she was led to the police station—and all for the miserable India shawl!

Under the searching cross-examination of the man in authority there, the truth soon came out. The shawl was Mrs. Richfield's, in very truth; but had been stolen from her by a maid, since dismissed who, in her turn, sold it to Mademoiselle Felicie for a mere trifle, that thrifty young woman considering it quite unnecessary to enquire too closely into the matter.

And so it came out—that Sara Ellington had hired the shawl, to make a brief display of what was not her own. Mr. Leigh's look of grave surprise, Mrs. Copley's ill-concealed contempt—oh! how they stung Sara! She went home in the latter's carriage, exasperated, it is true, from shame, but bitterly mortified, and seeing her own folly as she had never before seen it.

Mr. Leigh never called again, and Mrs. Copley, though very polite when they met, "dropped" her to all intents and purposes.

And that was all that Miss Ellington gained by hiring that India shawl from Mademoiselle Felicie.

Electric fans, that can be regulated so as to produce a light zephyr or a western cyclone at an expense of a cent an hour, are on exhibition. We are gradually nearing the point when life will be a perpetual joy.

—Mr. Wm. Boyd Hill, Cobourg, writes: "Having used Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil for some years, I have much pleasure in testifying to its efficacy in relieving pains in the back and shoulders. I have also used it in cases of cramp in children, and have found it to be all that you claim it to be."

A banana skin lay on the grocer's floor. "What are you doing there?" asked the scales, peering over the edge of the counter. "Oh, I'm lying in wait for the grocer." "Pshaw!" said the scales: "I've been doing that for years."

There is living near Conville, Fla., a colored man with the classical name of Romeo, who is wedded to a fair maid of his tribe called Juliet. This happy couple have twins whom they have named Romulus and Remus, and the interesting family is conveyed to church on Sundays by a horse named Pontius Pilate.

—Leading druggists on this continent testify to the large and constantly increasing sales of Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery and Dyspeptic Cure, and report its beneficial effects upon their customers troubled with liver complaints, constipation, dyspepsia, impurity of the blood, and other physical infirmities, and as a female medicine, it has accomplished remarkable cures.

Podger (revisiting old summer haunts)—I say, my friend, there were two sail-boats on this pond last year when I was here, and now there's only one. How does that happen? Rustie—Wal you see, there was some complaint about the aliveness of them boats, 'as we'd 'as how perhaps there was a wind enough to sail 'em both good, so we took one off. Guess this un'll do better now.

"I was recommended here by a friend," said a sooty-looking man, as he entered a drug store, "who told me you did a very large business, and that any purchases that I might want to make could be made on reasonable terms." "Yes, sir; certainly, sir. We have built up a very large trade by faithful attention to business, and by honest efforts to please our numerous customers." "You may give me a two-cent postage stamp, if you please."

—Mr. Henry Marshall, reeve of Dunn, writes: "Some time ago I got a bottle of Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery from Mr. Harrison, and I consider it the very best medicine extant for dyspepsia." This medicine is making marvelous cures in liver complaint, dyspepsia, etc., in purifying the blood and restoring manhood to full vigor.

Here is a story of Mr. Lawrence Jerome, the great New York stock broker, and uncle of Lady Randolph Churchill. He was passing the shop of a funeral furnisher during a ramble in the east end, when he saw displayed this sign: "Every requisite for a funeral." Solely entering, Mr. Jerome observed, in a sepulchral tone: "I wish to procure a corpse!" "Whose corpse—what corpse?" stammered the attendant. "Any corpse will answer," retorted Larry, as he is called by his friends in Wall street. "You see, I wish to get up a funeral, and as your sign says 'Every requisite for a funeral furnished,' and as the first requisite is a corpse, I thought I would enquire."

A HOME DRUGGIST TESTIFIES.

Popularity at home is not always the best test of merit, but we point proudly to the fact that no other medicine has won for itself such universal admiration in its own native state, and country, and among all people, as Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

The following letter from one of our best-known Massachusetts Druggists should be of interest to every sufferer:

RHEUMATISM. "Eight years ago I was afflicted with Rheumatism, so severe that I could not move from the bed, or dress without help, and the most powerful remedies without much if any relief, until I took Ayer's Sarsaparilla, by the use of which I was completely cured. It has since remained in my system, and it still retains its wonderful popularity. The many notable cures it has effected in this vicinity convince me that it is the best blood medicine ever offered to the public."

LAND REGULATIONS.

The Company offer lands within the Railway Belt along the main line, and in Southern Ontario, at prices ranging from $2.50 PER ACRE upwards, with conditions requiring cultivation.

A rebate for cultivation of from $1.25 to $3.50 per acre, according to price paid for land, allowed on certain conditions. The Company also offer lands without conditions of settlement or cultivation.

The Reserved Sections along the Main Line, &c., the odd numbered Sections within one mile of the Railway, are now offered for sale on advantageous terms, to parties prepared to undertake their immediate cultivation.

Terms of Payment—Purchasers may pay one-sixth in cash, and the balance in five annual instalments, with interest at SIX PER CENT. per annum, payable in advance.

Parties purchasing without conditions of cultivation, will receive a Deed of Conveyance time of purchase, if payment is made in full.

Payments may be made in LAND GRANT BONDS, which will be accepted at ten per cent. premium on their par value and secured interest, and may be obtained on application at the Bank of Montreal, Montreal; or at any of its agencies.

For Prices and Conditions of Sale and all information with respect to the purchase of Land apply to JOHN H. McTAVISH, Land Commissioner, Winnipeg.

By order of the Board.

EPPS' COCOA
BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicious and healthful beverage, which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal ailment by guarding ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."
