

Procurement

During the last round of multilateral negotiations with all our trading partners, Canada and the U.S. signed a code to liberalize government purchasing restrictions.

The Canada/U.S. Agreement will open up significant new market opportunities for Canadian suppliers. These opportunities cover a wide variety of goods, meaning that a great number of firms and all regions of Canada can benefit.

NEW OPPORTUNITIES FOR TRADE

General Service Industries

The service sector is today the largest source of employment and economic activity in Canada. The Free Trade Agreement will create new opportunities for trade in services, giving both Canadian and American service industries the right to do business on either side of the border. The Agreement sets a global precedent by creating rules to ensure that the U.S. treats Canadian businesses in the same way as American businesses and vice versa with regard to any future laws. Mutually acceptable professional standards will be established for services such as architecture. Among the service industries covered by the Agreement are agriculture and forestry services, mining services, construction services, distribution trade services, insurance and real estate services, commercial services, computer and enhanced telecommunications services and tourism services. Excluded from the Agreement are services provided by government and social services such as child care, as are
