

XXIX. & XXX.

LAMB'S SPECIMENS OF ENGLISH DRAMATIC POETS,

Who Lived about the Time of Shakspeare. With Notes. 2 nos. $1 00.

"We have conveyed our general opinion of this work in what we have already said: a word or two as to its peculiar merits. Nowhere in the whole compass of its literature, are the resources of the English tongue in power, in sweetness, terror, pathos, in description and dialogue, so well displayed. These two volumes are by the best hearts of England of their day and generation."—Broadway Journal.

"Once more, 'Sweet Charles Lamb,' we welcome thee to our table. Many of the works whence these specimens are taken, are extremely rare, and others entirely out of print. To the lover of the Dramatic art, the student, and the general reader, these specimens are alike interesting and useful. The critical notes are such as Charles Lamb only could write."—Emporium.

"'Elia' has here presented the reading public with one of the most interesting works on English literature. His elegant taste, ripe judgment and warm zeal in the cause of letters and morals peculiarly qualified him for the task he has so well executed, and his readers acquire a knowledge of the style of thought and expression of many principal writers in the English drama. He has sought for these treasures in hidden flowers, and has restored them to light, and his objects, which were to exhibit not only the style but the principle of thought which moved the minds of writers in those times, the opinions, moral creeds, and in a measure the history of the mind in those times is exhibited in the writings. Mr. Lamb has also given explanatory matter, many useful comments, and in short has opened up many valuable wells of living waters."—Anglo-American.

"In these two volumes are contained the pith and marrow—the beauties without the defects of Sackville, Peele, Decker, Webster, Marston, Heywood, 'Kit' Marlowe, 'rare' Ben Jonson, Beaumont, Fletcher and Massinger, and others still, who shone in constellated brightness around the Sun of Avon."—N. Y. Tribune.

"This admirable book has been published in their usual style of elegance, as Nos. 29 and 30 of the Library of Choice Reading, by Messrs. Wiley & Putnam. It is, as is almost universally known, made up of the choicest passages from the plays of a large number of gifted but slightly known dramatists of the time of Shakspeare, culled by that rarest and most genial critic ELIA, who, more than any other writer of the last few years, was perfectly pervaded by a love for the rich, neglected writings of old English authors.

"The selection is made upon admirable principles and with the nicest possible discrimination. The lover of dramatic literature, and indeed every one who relishes rich, passionate and imaginative poetry, will find the two volumes among the best recently published. They are well worthy the place in the Library which the publishers have given them. We cannot doubt that they will be heartily welcomed by a very large class of readers.

"Lamb has added a few notes of his own, but chiefly critical and explanatory. He has expunged from the originals everything superfluous or objectionable, and sought throughout, as he says in his preface, to show 'how much of Shakspeare shines in the great men, his contemporaries, and how far in his divine mind and manners he surpassed them and all mankind.'"—N. Y. Courier