Melbourne House.

This is a charming story, full of interest and pathos. It depicts in a graceful manner the trials and temptations in the way of a young christian; one who desires to walk exactly in the footsteps of her Divine Master. Her youth, and consequently, her inexperience of the world's ways often perplex her innocent mind, but through all the devious ways she has to walk she remains firm to the truth as she understands it, and does, what many professors do not:—walks well and faithfully in the light that she possesses.

The Old Helmet.

O the student of history nothing is more interesting than that of the helmets of our forefathers, the ancient Britons. Those helmets which sheltered their heads from the blows of the foes and enemies with whom they contended in the days when wars and conflicts were more common than happily they now are. This volume treats fully of the necessity of wearing in the stern condict of "the battle of life" that "Old Helmet" which has effectually covered the heads of thousands when they were "persecuted for righteousness' sake," and how it will and does the same to-day. The story is a very interesting one, of a religious character, and ought to have a place in every Sunday School library and Christian's home in the country, as it has a charming way of inculcating religious truth when other methods often fail.

ling Relither open ecide gious these

ovels

highsense
nat of
aster;
pake."
lerican
ligious
ctions,
unday
n this
nions,

ed the efforts. he old e find nating them finone ligious ithor's

ligious

works enting