

SPEAKER—continued.

duties, 213 et seq.; takes no part in debate whilst in the chair, 214; but may speak in committee of the whole, Ib.; only votes in case of equality of votes, signs votes and proceedings, 216, n.; his right of appointing certain officers and servants; his control over the same, 218, n.; informs house of changes at the table, 220; may suspend or dismiss employees, 221; appoints accountant, Ib.; may order withdrawal of strangers, 224; acts as chairman of board of commissioners of internal economy, 231; claims privileges at opening of new parliament, 278; is examined in the chair, in cases of inquiry by the house, 250, n.; his duty on examination of witnesses at the bar, 250, 251; is chairman of committee for revision of rules, 261; calls attention to certain quasi standing orders, 265; reads motions in the two languages when possible, 266; elected at commencement of new parliament, 275 et seq.; proceedings after his election, 277; reads prayers, 278; proceeds to the Senate chamber, Ib.; his duty on returning, 280; at a prorogation, 286; leaves the chair at six o'clock p.m.; resumes at half past seven, 297; his duty in absence of a quorum, 298, 299; at opening of sitting, 302; calls questions, 304; orders of the day, 305; calls for presentation of petitions, 315; puts question for their reception, 316; cannot present a petition, 317; lays certain papers before houses, 213; does not put motions for printing, 348; reads messages from governor-general, 360; communicates replies of eminent persons to thanks of parliament, 365; proposes a question to the house, 369; states motions and amendments, in their order, 388-390, 405; addressed by members, gives precedence to member who first catches his eye, 406; his duty when two or more members arise,

SPEAKER—continued.

407; will not permit written speeches, Ib.; or allow reading of documents reflecting or commenting on debates, 408; keeps members to question under debate, 412; calls members to order for infringing privilege of making personal explanations, 419; leaves chair on reception of message from governor-general, even in midst of a debate, 421; will not permit unparliamentary language, 427 et seq.; interrupts a member who violates the rules of debate, 431; names a member for breach of parliamentary decorum, 433, 434; reprimands, Ib.; orders that words be taken down, 434 et seq.; his course on his attention being called to danger of hostile meeting between members, 438; orders members to withdraw, 440; interferes to prevent personal allusions to judiciary, 442; his increased powers in English Commons under new standing orders, 443, 444; puts question and orders members to be called in for division or a question, 446 et seq.; votes in case of equality of votes, 453; resumes chair to decide question, 483; and whenever necessary, Ib.; presents the supply bill to the governor-general, 571.

Speech; of his excellency the governor-general at opening of session, 273, 280; at close, 286; address in answer (in the Senate), 273; (in the Commons), 282.

Standing orders, committee of; appointed, 492, 494. See Private Bills, sec. iii.

Stanley, Lord; governor-general of Canada, 870.

St. Catharine's milling and lumber company v. Queen, 118-122.

Strangers, admission of; to galleries of houses, 223, 224.