Not only have they provided model tenements and cottage homes, such as those described by Mr. Macdonald, but they have done so at a cost which yields a direct profit to the municipality apart from the indirect advantages which are yielded to the citizens themselves. As for the poorer classes, whose lot is thus improved, who can measure the benefit to them and to their children, and to the future of the nation at large? It is the duty of Canadian cities to secure that these advantages and benefits are theirs from the outset, and that no homes, nor the occupation of any homes, nor the occupation of any homes, will be tolerated, which will conflict with the highest moral, social and physical welfare of the citizens.
